

COLORADO SHOWS WEALTH IN MANY FORMS

Fine Agricultural Products Vie With Dazzling Riches From the State's Mountains

COLORADO BUILDING

AGRICULTURAL EXHIBIT

Those of us who live elsewhere than in the State of Colorado have been wont to believe that place a producer of mineral wealth alone. This idea seems to have become prevalent, probably because of the tales of fabulous riches almost daily unhoisted by Colorado's mountains. A visit to the Colorado exhibits at the Lewis and Clark Exposition will, however, show that the state is one remarkably rich in agricultural products.

In order to impress this fact upon visitors to the Exposition and thus upon the world at large, Colorado has erected a special agricultural pavilion. It stands on Lewis and Clark boulevard, a short distance north and east of the Missouri building, and contains a large exhibit of choice grains, grasses, vegetables and fruits, revealing a land of remarkable fertility.

Colorado's real greatness, though, is shown in the mineral exhibit in the Mining building. The exhibit is finely placed and has attracted wide attention since the opening of the Fair. In a circular case, directly in the center of the display booth, is an exhibit of pure gold, worth hundreds of thousands of dollars. Gold in its natural state, the eye and makes the onlooker catch his breath as he realizes the value of the precious stuff lying before him. Of the various kinds of gold to be seen are crystallized wire gold, which is found only in the seams of gold-bearing slate, native to Colorado and South Carolina; nugget gold, placer leaf and moss gold. The rarest form of gold, as it is mined, is shown in a piece of "electrum," a bit of ore in which the gold looks like cheap tin.

Among the specimens of gold from Cripple Creek is one which assays $170,000 to the ton, and is known as telluride. Telluride gold looks more like silver or lead ore, having the dull white color peculiar to both metals. Sylvanite gold is also shown, assaying $4,000 to the ton, and found in large quantities in the Cripple Creek district. The most interesting part of the entire display are the samples of pitchblende and carnotite, from which the commercially invaluable radium is secured. Colorado is one of the few places in the world where this precious stuff is obtained. As the pitchblende, a black, common-looking piece of earth, rests in the case, it gives off rays, which under a 24 hours' exposure, will photograph any article placed near it. The same is true of carnotite, a yellow earth much resembling ochre in color. This stuff will photograph articles with a 36 hours' exposure. Specimens of articles thus reproduced are on exhibition in the same case with the wonderful earth. When one remembers that radium is almost priceless, the latest price being over $100,000 per ounce, the magnitude of the carnotite and pitchblende fields in Colorado is brought to mind with stunning force.

Native silver in many forms is to be seen, but the most remarkable specimen is a nugget weighing 97 pounds. This huge nugget of wealth would, if coined into United States silver dollars, make 630 of those wily and elusive wanted pieces of metal. The mass is 99 per cent pure, and is the largest known piece of silver in the world.

There are also on exhibit in this treasure-trove of Colorado numerous specimens of other products of the earth, such as iron, lead, copper, zinc, and lastly, asbestos, the only absolutely fireproof thing known to man. In a case located at one end of the exhibit is a collection of gems found in Colorado that would pay a king's ransom and then leave a goodly amount for worthy purposes. Turquoise, beryl, garnets and, speaking of garnets, there is one on exhibit which is said to be the largest gem of its kind in the world, weighing in the neighborhood of ten pounds, and about as big as a musk-melon. Opals, amethysts, Thompsonites, pendote, tourmalines, zircons, sapphires (of which there are several exquisite specimens), and chrysoprase, a very rare gem, are also on exhibit. No better or more fitting illustration of the mineral wealth of the state is found than in the delicate little reproduction of the Pueblo Mineral Palace, which is mounted in a case just outside of the mining booth. It is an exact replica of the building in Pueblo, showing the precious stones, the gold, the silver and the base metals used in its construction.

Exposition grounds will find them out and accord to them their just need of admiration and praise.

Miss Carlisle visited a number of educational institutions in San Francisco and Southern California during her visit there, noting the methods of instruction used by the different schools.

Mrs. George E. Weister is soon starting for a trip to Europe, which will last for several months. Mrs. Weister spent a number of years abroad while studying, and has many friends there. She is now going to join a party of artists who will make studies in mountain scenery, traveling in Spain, the Alps region and elsewhere.

It is not improbable that Portland will become the permanent home of Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Richardson, formerly of Houston, Tex., and later of New York City. Mr. Richardson came to Portland last winter, and was so much impressed with the city and its possible future that he returned in June, and has made large investments here. Mrs. Richardson is a niece of Mr. William DeWitt Clinton, of Kansas City, who is a brother-in-law of Mrs. W. A. Moore, of Portland.

Frank M. Wells, of the law firm of Warner, Wells & Korb, New York City, is visiting in this city, after an absence of seven years. Mr. Wells is staying at the residence of his father, Dr. G. M. Wells, corner Twenty-eighth and East Harrison streets. Portland, he says, appears to have doubled in population during the past seven years, and with the great amount of advertising of the city through the Lewis and Clark Exposition will double its present population within the next five years.

SUBURBAN SCHOOLHOUSES

Additions Are Being Built at Lents, Arleta and St. Johns.

The schoolhouses at Lents and Arleta, in the southeast districts, are being enlarged. At the former district the four-room building is being enlarged to ten rooms, but the work will not be completed until about the first of November, hence a building on the outside has been temporarily rented until the addition is completed. The Lents district has over 900 pupils.

At Arleta, a new building is being completed by Contractor Hoffman. This extra building will provide a total of eight classrooms. With the two extra classrooms in the school-ground, there will be 12 rooms available for the coming year, all of which will be occupied from the opening. Next year a new building will be erected in the north end of the district.

No Race Suicide Here.

Brooklyn Eagle.

There are no signs of race suicide in the British royal family. Victoria had four sons and five daughters. King Edward is the father of six, and the heir-apparent to the Prince and Princess of Wales the other day makes an even half dozen for them, five being sons. The other items have done as well: the Empress Frederick, eight; and her son, Emperor William, seven; Princess Alice, six; and one of her daughters, the Empress of Russia, five; Prince Alfred and Princess Helena, five each; Princess Beatrice, four; Prince Arthur, three, and Prince Leopold, two. The Cumberland and Cambridge branches are equally prolific.
