GUNS FROWN ON RUSSIAN CAPITAL

Trepoff Guards Every Road and Street With Troops and Artillery.

MOSCOW IS REBEL CENTER

Provisional Government Is Set Up

Trepoff Prevents News Reaching Capital, Where Darkness Breeds Terror.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 28.—(Special.)—(Delayed in transmission.)—An ominous silence hangs over the city tonight, with the setting of the sun unbroken darkness settled down on the city, owing to the suspension of the electric lighting plant. Houses are lighted by candles and oil lamps, but on the streets no attempt has been made to mitigate the darkness.

The preparations that have been going on to reinforce the position of the military made quietly so as not to cause unnecessary apprehension or to arouse the people by the show of force, have been very significant. The crisis is here, and the authorities have put the finishing touches on their preparations. Just as dusk settled on the city General Trepoff, Assistant Minister of the Interior and Military Commandant of St. Petersburg, rode into the city on his return from Pskov, where he had been in consultation with the Czar, went to his office and within a few moments underlings were hurrying in all directions with secret orders to the troops. As rapidly as these instructions could be carried out, strong detachments of soldiers took up positions on all the roads running into the city and shut off all these avenues of approach.

Artillery Guards Roads and Streets. On these roads artillery has been trained in a way to absolutely cover the approaches. At all points of vantage in the city where the space permits the handling of large guns, artillery has been stationed. Machine guns and even pieces of heavy ordnance are trained on all the public squares, and the parks are similarly guarded. The placing of the artillery in position has been accomplished without display, and every possible effort has been made to hide the guns from the view of the people. The silent threat of these preparations to deal out death to thousands has not been lost on the people. The mailed fist of Trepoff is well appreciated.

Secrecy is now the order of procedure in the city. The authorities are not revealing their plans. There have been no public communications since the placards were posted warning the people that the soldiers will shoot to kill if there are any disorders.

The string of troops on the roads leading to the city is apparently a precaution taken against allowing news of outside events being brought in by means of couriers, as it will insure the city against attacks. Persons trying to enter the city are stopped and questioned as to the purpose of their visit. In many instances they have been searched to see if they were bearers of messages to agitators that would be used to excite the populace.

News Cut Off From Strikers. There is significance also in the manner in which news from other parts of the empire has been suppressed in the last few hours. Telegraphic communication with certain points has been cut off by the strikers, so that, even from points that can still be reached by wire, no dispatches telling of the progress of affairs for the last 12 hours have been made public. In this the hand of the censor is shown. For these reasons, it is difficult to secure definite information as to all that has transpired. The meager details simply show that there have been many clashes between the people and the soldiers in various parts of the empire. The reason why such news has been suppressed is plain enough. The authorities fear that the knowledge of what their compatriots in other cities have been doing will incite the populace in St. Petersburg to deeds of violence.

Private telegrams telling of the happenings of today and this evening have been suppressed. Not a code message has been transmitted since Friday. The newspapers have not appeared today, so that, even had press dispatches been allowed to reach their destination, there would have been no way of their reaching the people.

In the absence of reliable information on the subject, rumors of the worst character have flown thick and fast all day. From what is known, it is believed the revolution has actually come and that it has gained headway in certain parts of the country. It is believed here that there have been disturbances of a serious nature, accompanied by a great deal of bloodshed at Warsaw. It is also believed that at Lodz there have been similar disorders. All Southern Russia is understood to be aflame with the revolutionary propaganda. Enough information to give basis for this belief was received before the censorship was exercised so rigorously.

Rebel Government at Moscow. The situation at Moscow is also believed to be bad. Communication with that point has been cut off since yesterday afternoon, so that happenings of the last few hours cannot be learned. There was great significance in one of the last messages to be received in the city. This stated that at a meeting of delegates from all the political parties it had been decided to set up an independent government and to proceed without regard to the authorities. Wild excitement also prevailed there over a report that strikers from the districts inhabited by the workmen in the suburbs were marching on the city.

In St. Petersburg the interpretation placed upon the announcement that an independent government had been established was that the first revolutionary step had been taken. There is great significance in the fact that this action should have been taken at Moscow. That city is the former capital of Russia. A strong party has never been satisfied with the changing of the capital to St. Petersburg. Through all the internal struggles that have been of frequent occurrence since the recent war began, one of the demands has been for the transfer of the capital back to Moscow. Half the empire at least looks upon Moscow as the real center of government, and takes its cue from what transpires there. The fact that the independent government has been established in that city, of all the empire, is beginning to give it great weight. A provisional government at Moscow would be supported by thousands of people throughout the country in preference to the regularly established government of the Czar.

Odessa the Storm Center. Odessa is another storm center, and it is believed that, notwithstanding the absence of definite news, already there has been serious fighting there. What there has been is a clash between the workmen and troops is known. Soldiers attacked a gymnasium to put an end to meetings held there, and were attacked by students of both sexes. Over 100 students were injured in the conflict. A group of these, it were girls. A soldier split the head of a student with his sword, and it is believed that several more were victims of the troops.

That the people will seize the first opportunity to revenge themselves upon the soldiers is almost a foregone conclusion. Those who know the temper of the populace believe they would only wait for night to make their attack on the troops. Any uprising in Odessa is certain to grow rapidly, because it has the support of the municipal authorities. A resolution expressing sympathy with the strikers was adopted by the Municipal Council yesterday. With the authorities of the city on their side, the riotous element is certain to feel strong enough to make an attack. There is significance as well in the fact that the Black Sea fleet has been ordered to Odessa, as was reported yesterday. The construction placed on this is that the government fears an outbreak will occur, and wishes to have the fleet there in readiness to back up the military authorities in the recent disturbance. The presence of the fleet has had a great effect in quieting down the rioters. But the recent mutiny of the Kniaz Potemkin showed that the navy is honeycombed with dissension. It is extremely doubtful whether the sailors will ever again bear their guns on the townspeople, and it would not be surprising to those who know the condition of affairs in the navy if the giving of such orders should be the signal for the sailors to start another mutiny.

All Eyes on Poland. The eyes of the entire community are directed toward Poland. Fears that the revolutionary movement has broken out too far in that section of the empire to be easily checked are freely expressed. One message received yesterday stated that martial law had been declared in Warsaw. The garrisons there are said to be only 30,000 men, and this force is insufficient to deal with any general uprising in the city. In other parts of Poland, too, there has been fighting on a small scale. Very little provocation would have caused a general revolt to break out. That this has actually occurred is the firm belief of those who are in close touch with the situation throughout the empire.

Reform Is Only Salvation. About the only chance that the government has to avoid any clash with the citizens and then proceed quickly with the elaboration of the reforms that are demanded. If this course can be pursued until the end of Trepoff will remain his soldiers and the Czar can be forced to grant a liberal constitution and give the people the political reforms for which they are fighting—trouble may be avoided.

There is one other chance for the government. This is that dissensions may break out in the ranks of the strikers on the theory that their demands shall be put to the fore and that the movement may thus fall from the pressure exerted by the strikers themselves. There is a strong disposition on the part of some of the strikers, who have begun to feel the pang of hunger, to abandon their demand for political reforms if the economic changes they have been struggling for are granted. The skilled workmen and the intellectuals who are engaged in the strike movement hold that political reforms are paramount, and insist on standing out for them. If some strikers weaken under the burden of starvation and distress, the whole movement may fall for the time being, only to be renewed at the first opportunity in case the demands are not granted.

APPEAL AGAINST NEW LOAN Liberal Leader Says Army Will Be Colonized in Siberia. BERLIN, Oct. 28.—(Special.)—Professor Michael Ruesner, a leader of the Russian Liberals in Germany, makes an appeal to the civilized world not to help the Russian autocracy by a new loan. "The success of the revolutionary movement," said Professor Ruesner, "depends, in a high degree upon the fate of the Russian army in Manchuria. If it comes home, every town and village will possess a new revolutionary influence. Before, not a company would be left at home, not even the wounded. The new loan is intended in the first place to help realize the Siberia colonization scheme with a view to keeping the men of a dangerous army life-long prisoners in the Far East. "Can the western world take the enormous responsibility for this cruelty against brave soldiers, this treacherous attack against the movement for liberty, by filling the coffers of the autocrats with gold. Next week will show if the capitalists have any conscience. If they will wait a few months, the victorious Russian people will solicit their help for the building of schools and otherwise improving the sad conditions of the masses."
