With patience and musical senge, it should not be diffi-cuit to select Christmas music in this age and generation, seeing that every year new material is added, most of which is good. Thirty or forty years ago such a task must have been difficult unless one dipped into that never-failing source of supply, the music of the Episcopal Church in England. Of late years, however, American musical composers have come to the front, giving every evidence of promise, and in this relation one thinks of the success made by Harry Rows Shel-ley. If Ethelbert Nevin had fived he would have given church music a never-failing source of supply to draw from.
