

MAKING SURE
Fulton Will Fight New Timber Land Bill.

GIVE COUNTIES A SHARE
Government Sells Timber Without Land. He Claims One-Fourth for County—Some Eloquent Figures.

OREGONIAN NEWS BUREAU, Washington, Feb. 10.—Senator Fulton is preparing to vigorously oppose the bill soon to be reported by the public lands committee providing for the repeal of the timber and stone act, unless he can secure an amendment stipulating that 25 per cent of the money derived from the sale of public timber shall be turned over to the county in which the timber is situated.

Wants Share for Counties.

Mr. Fulton, after research in the department, shows that the pending bill becomes law, practically all of Oregon's 35,000,000 acres of timber land will be permanently reserved. About 6,000,000 acres are already reserved, and the other 29,000,000 more have been withdrawn from entry with a view to permanent reservation, leaving 5,000,000 acres still subject to entry, but which would be withheld from entry if the pending bill were enacted.

Immense Wealth in Timber.

He has quoted official figures to show that the average stand of timber in Oregon is 15,700 feet board measure per acre, ranging from 100 feet east of the Cascades, to an average of 17,700 feet on the west slope, in some instances reaching 40,000 feet to the acre.

Better Return From Farming.

Assuming, for the sake of argument, that forests renew themselves once in 50 years, in other words, conceding that timber is cut on an average of 50 years of age, Mr. Fulton shows by the Government figures that the timber land in Eastern Oregon under the proposed law would return only 10 to 15 cents a year in revenue, while better timber lands in Western Oregon would yield 70 cents to $1.50 annually per acre.
