As yet there has been very little sickness aside from nervous shocks and physical exhaustion, and from these most of the people have had time to recover. The efforts of the mill-tary authorities today are all in the direction of improving the sanitary condition and providing safeguards against any possible epidemic that may result from the exposed situation of so many thousand people. All refuse and debris of every sort must be deposited in trenches dug for that purpose, and the park has been divided pose, and the park has been divided into various sanitary districts over which the military officers have been given command and which are pa-trolled by regular soldiers or by municipal police. Information bureaus have been established and telephone service is being pro-vided by the Signal Corps of the regular Army. At the entrance of the park, known as the Panhandle district, an enor-mous billboard has been erected and is being used as a directory by those who wish to designate their tocation in the camp for the benefit of secking friends. All vehicles that enter the park are con-fiscated by the military authorities and are being used to deliver supplies to the various points, as well as to remove refu-gees desiring to reach points beyond the jurisdiction of the authorities. All those who desire to leave the park and to go to any point in the interior of the state are encouraged to do se, as every person leav-ing relieves the situation to just that ex-

Records and Instruments Lost. OAKLAND, Cal. April B.—The Oakland offices of the Western Union and Postal Telegraph companies are literally swamped with messages filed by people from San Francisco anxious to assure their friends of their safety. There are more on hand now than can be sent in a week. To relieve the strain as much as possible, packages of messages are being malled to nearby offices to be sent by wire to their destinations.

It is reported that the Western Union Company lost all of its office records, dating back to 1889, in the great fire. All of its dynamos, Instruments and wheatstone machines were also destroyed.

The Postal Telegraph Company, it is reported, succeeded in saving its dynamos and typewriters, but little clae of value.
