Just as one fine flower in a garden hows toward the greater beauty of a more favored one, so this book, which is an analysis of the imaginative life in relation to the creative spirit in main and nature, leads other books in a very wide collection. It stands relatively on high ground, talks rather of the stars and nature, leads other books in a very wide collection. It stands relatively on high ground, talks rather of the stars and is logical and is offer the stars of mundane things, and is logical and its principal aim is an attempt to make modern idealism more vitally effective, and it pleads for that humanitarianism of philosophical interests which'is more and more becoming the goal of the idealists of our generation. Dr. Alexander very frankly man's thinking through of one departiment of human experience. The titles of the eight chapters are: 'Impulses and Song,' 'Evolution of Poetic Spirit, 'The Worth of Life,' The Universal and the Individual,' The Imagination,' 'Aesthetic Expression.' 'Bauty and Personality,' and 'Nature and Poetic Mood.''

The Lady of the Decoration. by Frances Lit.
It. The Century Company. New York City.
A series of letters written to an American friend by a bewitching little Nentucky widow who is a teacher in a mission school in Japan during the Russo-Japanese war, partly to escape from the world which knows too well the tragedy of her brief wifehood and widowhood. The little book bristles with pleasant, original, restful ideas and will be especially appreciated by women readers, who will be flad to know that at the last the little widow consoles berself with a second bus-band, who has been her ideal all the time.
