"Sweat House" of the Cause Indians

Primitive Cure-all That Was Indirectly Responsible for the Massacre of Dr. Marcus Whitman.

The sweat house of the Caquse Indians, which is a common practice among the tribes of the Northwest, is a place where people go to dry out their bodies and cure certain ailments. The sweat house is a wooden box covered with a red curtain, and it is located near the river. The Indians believe that the sweat house can help them to get well, and they use it as a place to gather to talk and share stories.

Susan Clegg and her friend Mrs. Lathrop

The Village Philosopher Talks With Her Neighbor on the Troubles of Divorce.

"W" and Mrs. Clegg were quite the talk of the town. They were always seen together, and people would stop to listen to the conversation. One day, a man came up to them and asked, "What are you talking about?" Mrs. Clegg said, "We are discussing the troubles of divorce." The man was shocked, and he said, "I didn't know you had children." Mrs. Clegg replied, "We have two children, but they are grown now." The man was relieved, and he said, "That's good to hear."
