ALL-IMPORTANT ITEM IN THE FINANCIAL OUTLOOK.

The week in Wall Street. Prices have gradually hardened, but no outside interest has been attracted to the stock market.

THE WEEK IN WALL STREET

Prices have gradually hardened, but no outside interest has been attracted to the stock market.

NEW YORK, June 9.—(Special.)—What has gone on for the greater part of this week in the stock market may be described as a gradual hardening of prices rather than an active speculative movement for the rise.

Individual stocks have at times moved ahead rapidly and while the trading has been larger and broader than in the previous weeks, there has been no big sustained advance such as ordinarily accompanies a full-fledged bull speculation.

The market, which was supported from the outside houses, has made some very rapid and important advances and those who were largely dependent on the ground truth for their investments have been disappointed.

Much has been made of the reports and rumors of special developments concerning individual properties which have been the cause of the speculative activity and carrying over the stocks with sympathetic interest.

The effect on the money situation of the large return flow of cash from San Francisco has been marked, and interest rates for call and time loans have yielded distinctly.

There has been some delay admitted in the completion of the Panama canal, and the 600 bond transaction in Paris.
