Czar Is Angry at Countess Cassini

DAUGHTER OF FORMER RUSSIAN AMBASSADOR RENOUNCES GREEK CHURCH AND BECOMES A ROMAN CATHOLIC

W ASHINGTON, Aug. 12. — (Special on the brink of a bloody revolu-Correspondence.)—While Russia is tion, and the eyes of all ahe world are turned upon the troubles of her people, Countess Marguerite Cassini, daughter of. a former Russian Ambassador to Washington, has brought down the anger of Czar Nicholas II on her own head by adjuring and renouncing the orthodox rite of the Greek Church and publicly accepting the tenets of the Roman Catholic

In a country less despotle than hers this act of the petted daughter of a brilliant diplomat of the nation would be lightly regarded in official circles. Not so in St. Petersburg, where to abandon the national religion entails disgrace at court with penal consequences. When Count Nicholas Tolstol, ordained priest by none other than the pope himself, did not escape royal punishment, can a slip of a girl like the Countess-chum of Mrs. Nicholas Longworth hope to avoid the consequences of the Czar's mighty anger? is a question oft heard in Washington, where the heroic victim is well remembered as the chatelaine of the Russian embassy during the ambassadorial regime of her uncle, Count Cas sadorial regime of her fincle, Count Cas-sini. In the days of the Cassinis' glory here the American home of the Russian government was in the stately residence at the intersection of Rhode Island and Massachusetts avenues with Fifteenth street, owned and since occupied by Hon. Levi P. Morton. Here the petite Countess entertained in a manner bril-lant and unique in the new world. She was voung and winsome, and her gay Hant and unique in the new world. She was young and winsome, and her gay ways soon made her the center of a group of international young people. Her bright particular favorities were the President's daughter, whom she taught to smoke; Count de Chambrun, of the French embassy staff, and Representative Longworth. They were the "big four" at all social gatherings, and were an constantly in each other's company so constantly in each other's company that their intimates were kept guessing which girl was the most admired by Mr.

Longworth.

When her friend Mademoiselle Pavlow, was married during a visit to the embassy to the Russian Minister to China, the haut monde of Washington was present, and the occasion marked the zenith of the Countess' popularity as an official hostess. Soon after she went to Paris, where she has since resided, despite the fact of her uncle's transfer to the capital of Spain. If she saw the President's daughter and her husband on the occasion of the latter's recent visit in Paris, France, the world does not know it, and therefore continues to give credence to the report of a breach becredence to the report of a breach be-tween La Petite Comptesse and her American Princess friend caused by the objection of the Roosevelt paterfamilias to the friendship.

Apropos to the news about Countess Cassini is the arrival in New York of her countryman, Prince Cantacusene Speransky and the Princess, who was Miss Julia Dent Grant, daughter of General and Mrs. Fred Grant. The Prince and Princess are here estensibly for a six months' visit to relatives, but it is unofficially stated that they are seeking a permanent asylum from the conditions obtaining in Russia at this time.

With the Prince and Princess as house guests of Mrs. Potter Palmer, and Lady Herbert, the guest of her sister, Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, there is nothing to be desired for society at Newport until to the friendship.
