

TYPES OF PORTLAND'S NEW RESIDENCES

NEW WAREHOUSES TELL THEIR STORY

Springing Up Everywhere, They Show Growth of Wholesale Business.

ONE WILL COVER A BLOCK

Fall Realty Trade in Inside Property Shows Remarkable Promise. Demand for Heights Residence Locations Growing Fast.

Significant of the rapid increase of Portland's already great wholesale business is the present extension of the warehouse system throughout the city.

One of the largest projects of this character which has been taken up recently was announced yesterday by Charles K. Henry, real estate dealer.

This property was recently bought from the proprietors of the Willamette Iron & Steel Works by Mr. Henry and D. C. Patton.

Four Stories High, Covering Block

The new building will be four stories in height and, covering the entire block, will have an area 200 by 200, making it one of the largest structures of the kind in the city.

Six wholesale firms will unite in the use of the warehouse when it is completed. Although its erection is assured, it is not certain by whom it will be built.

Growth of East Side Business

Especially notable in the present movement among the local wholesalers is the extension in the business district of the East Side.
