New Head of Episcopal Church in Oregon is Essentially a Working Man

BY ARTHUR A. GREENE

Y first impression of Charles Scadding, who has come out here to be bishop of Oregon for the Protestant Episcopal Church, was that of extraordinary physical power. After 15 minutes' conversation I was convinced that his mind is as big and virile as his body and that in him are blended those elements which have made men leaders from the time of Moses Jown to Roosefrom the time of Moses Jown to Roosevelt. The new hishop stands head and aboulders above the commonality, speaking it both literally and figuratively. He's a fine patiern of a champion in the lists of the church militant.

He has a big combative head set firmly upon a body which suggests gladiators and knights in armor. His presence is dignified without being quatere; his cordial smile and hearty liandshake actost to that. He radiates good-fellowship in his best sense and makes one feel that here is the big brother of his people, whose capacities fit him to carry burdens and administer heavy dates.

Complete master of himself, knowing humanity in all its phases, sympathetic but positive, capable and sure, Bishop Scadding seems the man among 10,000 to but positive, capable and sure, Buchop Scadding seems the man among 10,000 to take up the hard, trying work of this great discess with its infinite tasks and possibilities. Surely the choice has been well made. The mantle of B. Wistar Morris, grand old ploneer of a hoty cause, has fallen upon worthy shoulders.

The bishop is a young man to have reached such power and influence. He is is, but, if the iruth must be told, he looks perhans five years older. The gray in his half and beard do the mischief, for he is otherwise in the full prime of his manhood. He is certain to accomplish great things for his church, being admirably adanted to mischonary work, of which there is a great need, for there mirably adanted to missionary work, of which there is a great need, for there are vast wildernesses to be penetrated here in Oregon. Struggling frontier communities must be ministered to, though the mountains be hard to surmount and the desorts a sore trial to cross. In every respect a fortunate choice it seems, for Bishop Scadding is equally at home with his people in a log cable or a cathedral. He's been through all the degrees.

If was wethereasy night that I called upon him to learn what manner of man he is. The result was most pleasant for the interviewer.

"What's the chance for a settlement of the grainlandlers' strike?" he asked me the minuate we were settled in our armchairs. "The bishop is getting on," was my mental comment and I had to armchairs. "The bishop is getting on."
was my mental comment and I had to admit that he knew more about that strike than I did. It was a good sign and augurs well for his future as a factor in public affair: He proved to be thoroughly informed as to many of the questions which are agitating the municipality and state.

When the fact was commented on he came back with another question.

"Why should a clergyman not be a

"Why should a clergyman not be a ritizen? There is such great work for the church to do that it cannot be carried forward unless its ministers have eyes and cars and hands for the world's affairs. I have always had strong human interests. The church is no cult nor Sunday club. It is God's machine for doing good in his world. The worked and lived in the slums and on the avenues. The other half are my friends and brothers. To reach results we must not wrap a mantle of Pharisaic righteousness about us and sli n cloister. We've got to get out and do something."

The Bishop's aggressive ideas of Christianity fitted my first impressions of him admirably.

be done in carrying on the great work of Bishops Scott and Morfis. I cannot hope to accomplish what those saint-ted men did, but I come to the task with a tennendous lot of physical strength and a willingness to do every possible thing of which I am capable. The Bishop's aggressive ideas of Christian in the proportion of the needs and opportunities. I want to say that I am not allied with any particular church party. "How about your plans, and how does the situation here appeal to you?" I asked, being confident that his answer

"I come with no preconceleved notions or prejudices. I have never been west of Denver before and only since my selection have I had an opportunity to investigate conditions, but I'd rather beliebop of Oregon than any other diocese in the country. There is so much to

of which I am capable.

"I've been so spleadidly received here that I already feel that this is my home. If I could have chosen my own field I couldn't have been more happy. You Oregonians take a fellow in so completely. Now you know how I mean that, he interpolated, as he responded to my smile at his choice of an expression. "You extend the 'glad hand' beautifully.

"My efforts are going to be directed along the lines of making strong what is rather than any unustal expansion. Of course I'm speaking of the church. I am making soundings and endeavoring to familiarize myself so far as possible with the needs and opportunities. I want to say that I am not allied with any particular church party. There is room for all, though in minor matters they may disagree. Life is too throbbing, the rich red blood runs too strongly to make it worth while to quibble over technicalities. I'm no private chaplain and in no possible sense a partisan. Discord is so detestibly small, I hate it. There is so much to do and few enough of us to do detectibly small. I hate it. There is so much to do and few enough of us to do it. So unity in the church, as it is in industrial, political and social affairs, is the all-to-be-degired sentiment.

"I want to be a faithful, hard-working bishop and citizen. Wherever there is need of me I want to be on the ground. Give me a chance to work and I'm sulted, and I feel that I'm going to be very happy here in Oregon."

of a Peace Cross, erected on the site to commemorate the end of hostilities between Spain and America. A few year's later, a cathedra, or bishop's chair, carved from stone, sent for the purpose from Canterbury, England, was unveiled with appropriate ceremonies. Here, also, President Roosevelt, in 1994, addressed the most notable gathering of Anglo-Saxon hishops ever assembled in this country, the occasion being the 400th anniversary of the establishment of the English Church in America. The event was made internationally important by the presence of the venerable Archolshop of Canterbury, who was the first ecclesiastical dignitary of that rank to visit the land of Secretary of State and Mrs. Elihu Root, Secretary of State and Mrs. Elihu Root, who arrived from South America about the time Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt came here from Oyster Bay, have been the most feted guests to date. Now they are passing the honey to Secretary and Mrs. Taft, who have just returned to their K-street home after a stremuous formight in Cuba. If present plans carry, life in Washington for the next few weeks will be scarcely less stremuous than in Ha-Washington for the next few weeks will be scarcely less stronuous than in Havama, for the popular Scarciary and his wife, as everybody is agreed that whatever is done in the way of entertaining Mr. and Mrs. Taft must be accomplished without delay lest there be another call for the Nation's librerary Secretary of State to visit lands far distant for the purpose of diplomacy or war, and society here be left with a new case of "Hamlet, with Hamlet left out," Certainly, to man in public life has a record for official traveling squal to that of the Secretary of War, and few women in her circle have had more varied experiences than his wife. than his wife.

INVEST=AT=THE="HUB"

You young men who are in the springtime of your youth are, or should be, seeking safe investments. Why not turn your attention to Baker City, Oregon, the "Hub" of a rich territory, three hundred miles in area? Baker City, known as the "Queen City," a city of opportunities, is surrounded by beautiful hills, being an ideal location for a city of 100,000 or more population. This is possible within the next few years, located as it is at the head of one of the most fertile valleys in the West, with markets for more than ten times the production of the valley; in fact, thousands of dollars are sent out or eggs, poultry, hay, grain, etc., every year, that could, and should, be raised at home.

Baker City needs more energetic, progressive young men. This city is destined to become a great mining, manufacturing and trading center. Certain conditions in and around Baker City will cause it to take strides which if has never known before. These existing conditions can be seen at a glance; such as railroad building, the construction of an electric line to the Searles mines, the Eagle Valley line now building will connect Baker City with important outside points. The Pacific States Telephone Company will immediately begin the work of spending $30,000 in improvements of its Baker City system, enlarging it to meet the needs of a rapidly growing city. These are only a few of the things which have been started in this lively city

This company owns and has on the market some desirable lots located near the business district.

These lots are 25x100, each located on a street which is 60 feet wide, with alleys 161/2 feet wide running through the blocks. We are offering the corner lots at the low price of $100, the inside lots for $50 each. We are prepared to give the purchaser a clear title to any of this property, and our terms are so reasonable that every man in the City of Portland should take advantage of this chance to make a gilt-edge investment.
