WILL LOOK OVER GROUND

President of Oregon Commission Expects to Select Place for Erection of Oregon or All-Northwestern Building at Exposition.

Jefferson Myers, president of the Oregon Jamestown Exposition Commission, left last night for Norfolk, Va., to look into the proposed participation of Oregon in the Jamestown Exposition next year.

President Myers goes East by way of Omaha and will return about December 1 by way of New Orleans and San Francisco.

"I shall do everything possible while in the East to induce the railroads to make special exhibition rates for both passenger and freight, in the interests of the Northwest," said Mr. Myers before leaving.

"I am going East not only to represent Oregon in arranging for an exhibit at Jamestown, but I intend to have something to say to the press of the country from the lakes to the oceans about Oregon and Oregon's resources."

Late yesterday a reply was received from Governor Albert E. Mead of Washington, in answer to the official letters sent out by Secretary John H. Stevenson.

Encounters a Policeman From Missouri

United States Marshal Reed Is Held Up Late at Night and Compelled to Prove His Identity.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL CHAS. J. REED can testify to the vigilance of at least one Portland policeman. One night last week the Government official was wending his way homeward in the darkness, and had neared the end of Ford street on Willamette Heights, when he was approached by a uniformed officer, who halted him.

"Who are you, where are you going, and what is your business here at this hour?" the officer asked.

"I am going home," was the reply. "Well, you'll have to show me," replied the policeman; "we have orders to be very careful about strange men we meet on our beats."

Throwing back his coat, Marshal Reed displayed his official badge, which, needless to say, was sufficient to satisfy the policeman that the wester was "all right."

Patrolman Craddock, reckoned as one of the best men in the Portland Police Department, was the officer who held up the United States Marshal and compelled him to prove his identity.

Orders have been issued to patrolmen on the first and second night reliefs to be very careful as to persons seen out late, and to exact an accounting from all whom they do not know.

Shoots Brother to Be Free. ST. LOUIS, Oct. 20.—Albert Croissant, president of the Croissant-Bowman Stationery Company, was shot through the abdomen and probably mortally wounded today by his brother Edward. Edward stood at the corner of Locust and Fourth streets, near his brother's business house and when Albert passed, shot without warning, exclaiming: "I'm a man now."

Edward, who has been a sanitarium patient, was arrested, and at the Four Courts declared his regret that he had not killed his brother, asserting that the brother exerted a hypnotic spell over

BERKELEY GIRL ON THE STAGE

Talk With Warda Howard, Leading Woman at the Lyric, Who is a Real College "Widow"—By Arthur A. Greene

TO begin with, she's a real beauty with the figure of an artist's model. These qualities are not indispensable to the success of a young woman on the stage but they're mightily helpful.

Warda Howard's face and form would command attention in any company. She has a voice that many a Broadway star might envy. It is pliable, rich and melodious as a violin. She has not learned the lesson of using it to the best advantage on the stage but in conversation it is a voice of infinite possibilities of light and shade.

But best of all Warda Howard is decidedly intelligent, and there's none too much of that commodity in stageland. Naturally well endowed mentally, she has had unusual educational opportunities.

Since "The College Widow" is coming so soon it occurs to me to say, appropriately I believe, that Miss Howard is the type of a girl which all college men affectionately remember as a college "widow." I'm sure she'd be a success in that role, given a little more stage training, for she's one to the life.

All Berkeley students of the past five years will remember "Teddy" Howard, class of '04, daughter of Professor Howard, dean of romance languages. She isn't a sorority girl, for papa doesn't approve, any more than he approved her choice of the stage but she wears a moving spirit in all matters of interest to the Berkeley undergraduate body.

Before her college course she graduated from grammar school and a year at a finishing institution and a year of travel. Four years at Berkeley and two on the stage—that's the career of Warda Howard to date. Her literary record is essay at acting with James Neil at the Liberty Theater, Oakland, in the Winter of 1904. She met Mr. and Mrs. James Neil at a college party in Berkeley, having heard of her no small fame as an amateur in Berkeley theatricals, asked her to appear with them for a week at the Liberty in Oakland.

I met her for the first time in her little dressing room at the Lyric the other day and received the information I have given you. She was trying to enforce discipline on an obstreperous Boston scribbler which is her pride, and between scolding the dog and talking to me she revealed the history of her life. Her manner of telling it was naive and highly interesting.

"It strikes me as something of a joke when people are good enough to tell me I have prospects," said she. "Why, it has only been within the last two months that I seriously considered making acting a life profession. Recently I've begun to think that since my literary doesn't appeal to me a bit, I don't like to be told gush but I've been holding a closed session with myself lately and have concluded that since my literary water isn't half bad and that I'll stay."

interest in Berkeley theatricals. Was always up to my eyes in something of that kind and then "boning" like all possessed, to catch up in my studies. Well one night I met Mr. and Mrs. James Neil at some college affair. They had heard of me and asked me if I'd like to play a part in "The Parisian Romance" which they were preparing for at the Liberty Theater in Oakland. Dadlike was away, else I'd probably been locked up; but I was delighted with the idea and agreed. What do you think they gave me? Baroness Chevalier! Can you imagine it? I must have been something exorciating. The college people came in droves to see me act and I've since convinced myself that Mr. Neil had a deep and sinister design in giving me the chance. He wanted Berkeley patronage. Well he got it that week. I certainly drew my salary into the house for the sole and only reason that every one of those students was crazy to see what "Teddy" Howard would be like in really real show.

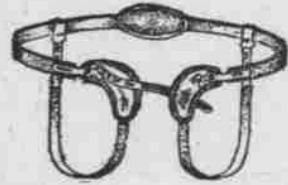

fell down, literally I mean, one day and broke my arm. "Back home went I and spent some months there while that arm mended and my father hoped I had had enough. But I hadn't. It was "give me the stage or give me death" with me. So I invaded vanderbilt with some success and then came this offer to play with the Lyric Company and I arrived in Portland Christmas week last year. "It is splendid here. I have found the people of the company delightful. Mr. Keating and Mr. Flood are the finest men anyone could wish to work for. I like the people who come to see us act and I'm fond of Portland. You see I'm happy, prosperous, thank you, and I hope I know more about my profession than I did a year ago. It's hard work but the work's fun. There's nothing pleasanter than entertaining people—crowds of people. I have come to know hundreds of our audience by sight and every week I have little receptions back here after the performance for women and children who are regular attendants and are good enough to be my friends. "I don't care so much about the men but I do want the women and children to like me, for if they are fond of me I must be doing some—little good. Don't you think so?"
