THE HOUSE THAT JACK BUILT

Opera With Mother Goose Characters to Be Produced. This is the house that Jack built; The queer little house, The dear little house, Oh, this is the house that Jack built. Mother Goose, whom we loved in childhood days, is coming to us again in a new form, her verse set to merry jingles and her characters impersonated by real children. Jack will build his house again, and we may all be children together when Mrs. Gaynor's opera, "The House that Jack Built," is given under the auspices of the Institute Club of the People's Institute. The opera is in two acts, and introduces to us, besides Mother Goose and her son Jack, for whom she is giving a birthday party, their Worshipful Majesties, King Cole and the Queen of Hearts, with their retinues and maids of honor. The Knave of Hearts is thwarted in his mischief-making by the observing fairies who overhear his plot to steal the key to Mother Goose's house where the golden Humpty Dumpty comes to make the tarts, while Jack goes to invite the guests and Mother Goose goes to market, but returns to find the Humpty Dumpty stolen. In revenge for not being invited to the party the blackbirds have tried to spoil it, and in the second act pay the penalty by being condemned to be "baked in a pie." The dear little guests, all familiar characters, arrive, but Captain Henry has prepared a short demonstration and explanation of the wireless which is not only amusing but is instructive. The public will know more about this branch of science from the lecture of Captain Henry than they could otherwise learn in a month. There is not an intelligent person in Portland who does not want to understand the wireless, and this will be their opportunity. This demonstration is not a burlesque, travesty or trick, but the real thing. This afternoon and night will end the great vaudeville bill which has caused a sensation during the past few days. The programme contains such entertainers as the Clown Harding, the Chinaman Ah Sid, the Four Masons, Mlle. Olive, the female juggler; Whelan and

NOVELTY BILL AT THE GRAND
Demonstration in Wireless Telegraphy Feature Act This Week.
While the bill of the past week at the Grand has been extra fine, Sullivan & Conditine have an even better one for this week, commencing tomorrow afternoon. There will be an unusual number of novelties, besides a corps of singers, dancers, comedians and acrobats. In no respect will the bill be ordinary, and there will be features such as have never before been seen here in vaudeville.
The headline act will be a practical demonstration in wireless telegraphy by Captain Henry, E. E. late of the Government service. A scientific lecture is something unusual in vaude-Muffins form the staple dish at tea parties in Kensington palace, London. The King, like his mother before him, has a special weakness for muffins.

Every time the Kaiser visits Dantzig, says a London Mail correspondent, all the old warships in the harbor are towed to a position in which he cannot see them.
