Testimony About Sale of Hercules Mine Will Be Contradicted by Records—Evidence Conflicts With Darrow's Speech.

GAMBLER AWAY RICH MINE. SPOKANE, Wash., June 29.—(Special.)—Harry Orchard lost his interest in the Hercules Mine in a poker game at Burke, Idaho, a year before the labor riots occurred in the Cour d'Alenes, tonight said James McAlpine, a mining man from the Cour d'Alenes, who was a partner in the wood business for nearly two years with Orchard at Burke.

BOISE, Idaho, June 29.—(Special.)—Throughout the introduction of testimony for the defense in the Haywood case there has been the widest latitude allowed in telling of conditions in the Cripple Creek and Telluride districts during the trouble in the period beginning at Telluride in 1902, and extending through the Cripple Creek disturbances in 1904.

Opens Doors for State. The state has introduced considerable testimony about the outrages in the Cripple Creek district, but it has so far been kept out of Telluride. It now seems probable that the latitude allowed will react upon the defense when the state introduces its rebuttal testimony.

swearing strongly for the defense in an effort to break down the statement made by Orchard to the effect that he was with the mob at Wardner on April 28, 1906, that he assisted in adjusting the charges of powder under the Bunker Hill & Sullivan mill and that he touched off the fuses of one of them.

who could remember about any one on that day, and that was only a few weeks after the riot. The testimony reminds those who know something about conditions after the riot of the outpouring of witnesses from Canyon Creek at the time of the Corcoran trial to testify that they saw the defendant at Burke, 50 miles away, throughout that day when the mill was destroyed and the men killed.

Evidence Contradicts Darrow.

Another very peculiar feature of this testimony is that Mr. Darrow in his opening statement to the jury, said they would show that Orchard was at Wardner, but that he did not take part in the destruction of the mill. That statement was made after serious consultation with Dr. McGee and, when Dr. McGee had testified that he thought he saw Orchard at Mullan, it was the first intimation of this line of proof.

Records Disprove Story.

There was another man on the stand who gave peculiar testimony, and that was J. H. Ramsey, the Murray stage-driver. He testified he met Orchard on the road soon after the riot and that Orchard sought to get him to buy his interest in the Hercules mine for $400, as he had to get out of the district at once.

CHANLER HIS RUNNING MATE

Anti-Bryan Men Lining Up for Minnesota Man.

BIG STATES ARE FOR HIM

Roger Sullivan Confers With Johnson's Manager—Pennsylvania, New York and Illinois Are Claimed by His Boomers.

CHICAGO, June 29.—(Special.)—Governor John A. Johnson of Minnesota is the "dark horse" of Henry Watterson, of Kentucky, for the Democratic presidential nomination, and political movements are going forward which portend a lineup of the anti-Bryan forces in the National Convention of 1908 behind Mr. Johnson.

The declaration of Mr. Watterson some months ago that he would in due time propose the candidacy of a Democrat who would appeal to the thoughtful leaders of the party stirred gossip throughout the country concerning the identity of the Watterson choice. The Louisville editor declined to make public the name of his favorite. It was stated positively some days ago by an Eastern committee man that Mr. Johnson was the man meant by Mr. Watterson.

"When the time comes," said a Democrat whose source of information is the best to be had today, "the States of New York, Pennsylvania and Illinois will be in line for the man from Minnesota. Democrats who want to win are getting behind Johnson. There is not much doing on the surface just now, but the work of organization is in progress.

"As for his running mate, if we succeed, you can say that Lieutenant-Governor Lewis Stuyvesant Chanler, of New York, might be the man."

GETTING READY FOR CAMPAIGN

Bryan's Right-Hand Man Starts on Stumping Tour.

OMAHA, Neb., June 29.—The Bryan campaign for delegates to the Democratic National convention has opened in Omaha, Bryan's closest political friend, left Omaha for a two weeks' canvass of Wyoming in the interests of Bryan's candidacy. Dahlman says he will make speeches in most all the states of the Union between now and the meeting of the National convention, giving all his spare time to the work of getting delegates for Bryan.

CARNEGIE ANSWERS HARVEY

Denies Roosevelt Injured Business or Europe Goods.

LONDON, June 29.—Andrew Carnegie, in an interview dealing with G. B. Harvey's recent statement that President Roosevelt's popularity in Europe was due to the fact that his policy had driven from France, Germany and Great Britain all thoughts of American industrial and financial rivalry, says:

no nation can suffer reverse without Great Britain's suffering also. The same applies to France and Germany. "It is a surprising commentary on Mr. Harvey's charge that under President Roosevelt's administration our country has enjoyed the greatest season of material prosperity ever known."

Fugitive From Justice Returns From Canada and Gives Himself Up.

COLUMBUS, O., June 29.—Charles E. Burr, the missing member of the Board of Public Service, who disappeared in March last, after the grand jury had returned an indictment against him for accepting a bribe in connection with the Broad-street paving scandal, and for selling material to the city from a firm in which he was interested, appeared at the court today and gave himself up. He had been in Canada since his flight and arrived here last night.

New Hampshire City Experiences 100 Shocks.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., June 29.—Earth tremblings that shook houses perceptibly at intervals were felt here today. Windows shook and rattled and bric-a-brac clattered from the shelves. Sometimes half an hour would elapse between the vibrations, but by sundown 100 shocks had been felt. The heaviest came between 5:15 and 5:45 P. M.

WHERE DID THE MONEY GO?

Much of It Used to Hide Shortage in Treasury, Which the Reformers Would Have Discovered—How the Scheme Was Worked.

HARRISBURG, Pa., June 29.—(Special.)—"The state will be avenged upon those who have plundered it. Criminal and civil suits will be instituted and the case is a strong one."

This declaration was made today by James Scaret, chief counsel for the legislative committee which yesterday completed its three and a half months' investigation of the Pennsylvania Capitol scandal. Within 30 days the investigators will render a report to Governor Stuart, and then, when he turns over the papers to Attorney-General Todd, will come the retribution.

Under Forgotten Law.

The money was taken under a questionable construction of an old and nearly forgotten law which empowers the Board of Public Grounds and Buildings, headed by the Governor, to make such repairs and improvements as are necessary to the buildings used by the Legislature and to pay the bill out of the treasury.

Covering Old Shortage.

A very prevalent belief is that a large part of the money was used to cover a shortage found in the state treasury following the death of Senator Quay, which would have been discovered by the reform treasurer elected in the Fall of 1905. This treasurer, William H. Berry, did not take office until the following May. Over $3,000,000 was paid out of the treasury on the padded Capitol bills between the time of his election and his inauguration.

A tremendous amount of the work in the building is fraudulent. Furniture is filled with putty and brasswork is weighted with pigiron. To dig out the putty and other filling and make the work substantial will cost over $1,000,000. The whereabouts of the two men most wanted in connection with the affair is a mystery. Huston is said to be some-
