DEATH OF AN OLD OREGONIAN

Very few persons who remember the steamer Lot Whitcomb, built at Milwaukee in 1850. A reminiscence of the steamer, and of men of the time, is furnished by the death in Vermont of Captain W. H. Hall, who was her first Captain, as the first commissioned pilot on the Columbia and Willamette Rivers. Captain Hall died June 22, in Chelsea, Vt., in his 84th year. He came to Portland in August, 1850, in the bark Louisiana, from San Francisco, to take charge of the Lot Whitcomb. On the same vessel was Jacob Kamm, who came to take the post of engineer of the new steamer. The machinery came up on the Louisiana, on the same trip. Mr. Kamm put it in, and the steamer started to run in the Fall of the same year. She proved too large a boat for the trade at that time, and later was taken to California. On the Louisiana, besides Captain Hall and Engineer Kamm, came John Arvis Warrman and W. D. Carter, who established the Oregon Weekly Times at Milwaukee, which later was published in Portland, where it suspended. All these, save Mr. Kamm, are now dead. Captain Hall came out to California in 1849. After leaving Oregon, about 1864, he returned to his native state, and in 1861 entered the volunteer army for service in the Civil War. He raised Company G, Sixth Vermont Regiment, and served until discharged in 1865. He was prominent in the local affairs of his town till his death.

Mr. Howlett was born in Jennings County, Indiana, April 2, 1849, and came to Oregon with his parents in 1851, settling in Clackamas County, near the present town of Eagle Creek where most of his life was spent. The remains will be taken to Eagle Creek tomorrow morning where the funeral services will be held at 11 o'clock. Interment will be in the family plot in the Gibson Cemetery near Eagle Creek.

The charge he is wanted on in this city is similar. It is said he flooded the city with bogus checks. Beckett, who is the son of a Canadian Pacific railway agent, passed checks here and elsewhere throughout the Northwest under the name of Drinkwater, and posed as the son of Auditor Drinkwater, of the Canadian Pacific system. In this manner he managed, it is said, to swindle a number of people of prominence. His word was not doubted at any time until he played the game so strongly that inquiries were made and it then developed that he was not a relative of the high official whose name he forged, but was simply a young man with a desire to spend more money than he could earn by legitimate means.

Beckett will be prosecuted here on a charge of forging a check for $45 on the Canadian Pacific Railway, which was cashed by Phil Metachan, of the Imperial Hotel.
