TRY ONE-MAN RULE

King of Portugal Turns to Dictator to End Abuses.

MACHINE RULE A FAILURE

Alternate Ministries of Two Corrupt Parties Caused Carlos to Make Franco Dictator to Clean Out Graft.

BY MANUEL RUBERO, LISBON, Sept. 14.—(Special.)—Revo lution has been checkmated in Portugal, at least for the present. The recent attempt to assassinate King Carlos and the Premier has led to the ar rest of 30 Republican leaders. It is believed that this action on the part of the government will bring to a head one of the gravest political struggles fought out in Portugal since constitutional government began. Dom Carlos dissolved the Cortes, which had become little more than an arens of corrupt factions, and took the strong but necessary step of refusing to name a date for the convoking of a new Parliament. He swept out of office for the time being both of the parties which held and quitted office by arrangement, changed places with the mechanical regularity of the figures in a Dutch clock, and battened with equal rapacity upon the country. Each of them in the last few years had ob-tained majorities by the usual manipulation at the polls in a land where the vast majority of people never go near the ballet boxes. Each of them has failed to govern against the obstrucfunct, and the growing violence and daring of the Republican agitation.

King Finds Young Dictator.

Each of the regular parties, now ex-cluded from office and its sweets, begged in turn to be intrusted with a dictatorship. King Carlos could have entrusted it to either without seeming to range himself against the other. He was impartial between them, and the peasants, with the more solid class in the towns, were weary of both. But in Portugal, as elsewhere, the King's government had to be car-ried on. Don Carlos called to his aid a new man-young, brilliant and fear-less. This was Senhor Joao Franco. He had been for a time Minister of the Interior in the party of the Re-generators, who correspond to "Conso far as any names agree with realities in Portuguese party polities. The other organization is that of the Progressists, who believe that they are the more liberal section

Senhor Pranco separated himself from his old associates and formed a new party of men, whose programme might be described as National Lib-eral or Liberal Unionist—one of those combinations of a strongly patriotic creed with enlightened domestic principles by which the best work in the policy of all the great countries has from time to time been done. Senhor Franco could form a following in the country, but he could carry no parliamentary seats against the power of mentary seats against the power of the regular machines. He had proved his independence by trenchant criticism even of the court. In May lest year King Carlos took the decisive step of entrusting him with the for-mation of a cabinet over the heads of both the factions, Regenerators and Progressists alike, who believed they had a consecrated right to alternate in office at convenient periods. office at convenient periods.

Senhor Franco became a Premier with-out a party. He is exercising what is called the dictatorship until he can make one. He is undoubtedly making one, and it might be the salvation of Portugal if this Minister, prepared to devote his life to the campaign against waste, corrup-tion and incompetence, were able to rally around him a sufficient number of fol-lowers to create the basis of a reformig majority in a new Cortes.

In spite of the interested declarations against tyranny which have been published throughout Europe by the ex-mem-bers of the late Portuguese Duma, liberty-loving minds must not be unduly excited by the term "dictato..." In Portugal the Dictatura is a recognized institution, and means only that countries which cannot be governed through Parliaments must sometimes be governed without them un-til the national spirit crushes faction or the cabals of office-seekers return to a better mind. For more than a generation after the Peninsular War the Portuguese were governed by nothing but dictator-ships of one kind or another. Now they are no longer chronic, but they are re-The Dictatura is always held n reserve, and most governments have seen compelled to have recourse to it for longer or shorter periods, even under the Parliamentary regime of the last half-century. The process is less agonizing and more useful than the name suggests.

The people are as indifferent under the occasional regime of administrative despotism to the wrath of the party which does not happen to be the one in power as were the medieval market women to the Wars of the Roses in England. A ministry conducting affairs by a dictator-ship legislates as a rule without Parliamentary assistance, carries its measures without the aid of an opposition, enforces them without asking a majority for a superfluous expression of its sup holds elections at a suitable time pears before the chastened Cortes recalled by these methods into life, and asks and receives in due course an indemnity for all its nominally illegal proceedings.

Making War on Graft.

Senhor Franco is in a different position, and may be able to carry to the end a really thorough treatment of the constitutional complaint. He is a Premier without a party in the orthodox sense. That is by far the most hopeful fact in the situation. With this dictatorship the work is no necessary but unwelcome, in terruption of the office-seekers' opportun-ist game. Senhor Franco is overhauling the accounts and revising the whole system of national bookkeeping. He is stopping the victous system of supple-mentary credits by which the handsome balance regularly announced upon the pro-duction of every budget was turned into another deficit before the end of every session. He is putting down sinecures and pluralities. He is also putting down with an unflinching hand, as he is entitled to do, the Republican movement, excited to fever during the last two or three years by sympathy with the Russian revolution and that hysterical idolatry of the Duma to which unreflecting Democrats have given way in every land un-

Threat to Assassinate King.

The true character of the revolutionary movement in Portugal was shown last November, when the Repub-Hean Deputy, Senhor Affonso Costa attacked the person of Dom Carlos, and apostrophised him in the Cortes as fol-land, lest prison be your portion." And when called to order, the Deputy con-

"I take back nothing. For less than King Carlos has done the head of Louis XVI rolled on the scaffold." To emphasize the serious signifi-cance of this incident, the Spanish Re-publicans dispatched to Lisbon enthu-siastic telegrams of congratulation.

riastic telegrams of congratulation. The great strength of the Reds in Portugal is in the two principal cities, Lisbon and Oporto. They have no hold upon the peasants. The Republicans, in a word, are a small minority of the population. There is no doubt that they can be grappled with successfully. There is scarcely less doubt that the struggle must be waged some time, and had best be fought out now; and there will be rejoicing if the conspir-acy of assassination, happily discovered and folled, carries forward with a sweep the work of ranging all the best elements of the nation behind King Carlos and his dictator. The King means well. It is difficult to see what other measures were open to him. He wished to reign constitutionally. It has been his misfortune, not his fault, if arbitrary rule has been

Carlos and His Queen.

The King, Carlos I, was born September 28, 1863, so that he is nearing the completion of his, fourty-fourth year. By a rare coincidence, his Queen, year. By a rare coincidence, his Queen, year born at Twickenham on the completion of his, fourty-fourth is and and the work of placing a sending station on board the Lightvessel No. 87, now at the Tongue Point Buoy station. King was educated at Oporto by Por-tuguese professors, and after his edu-cation was ended he made a tour of Europe. He possesses what is rather the happy forte of kings—a remarkable knowledge of languages. He speaks seven, five of them fluently. With English he is quite at home. Like his father, he is a Shakespearean scholar. Dom Luis translated "The Merchant of Venice," "Othello," and "Hamlet" into Portuguese, and in this reproduction, It is said, the present sovereign took part. He was then Duke of Braganza, and was known throughout the king-dom as a keen sportsman and the finest shot in the country.

Queen Amelie ranks among the most gifted women of her age. She was for a while best known in the land of her adoption as a great sportswoman. She is a powerful swimmer, and was awarded the gold medal of the Royal Hu-mane Society for saving two children from drowning in the Tagus. But the Queen possesses distinguished intellectual gifts. She studied medicine, passed her examination and obtained a degree, and is thus the only Queen M. D. extant. Her majesty has made a specialty of nursing, much to the advantage of her subjects. At her own expense she maintains a dispensary hospital for the sick children of the poor, and all over the country she is known for her interest in the work.

Among the reforms which she preaches to her own sex is the discontinuance of tight-lacing. Her majesty was delighted when the Rontgen rays were discovered. She photographed, by the aid of the rays, a tight-laced lady, and thereby was able to prove how pernicious the habit is, and to show the deformity caused by undue show the deformity caused by undue pressure on the internal organs. It has been said that the Queen's precept and example have diminished tight-lacing in Portugal.

Cooke City, Where Chief Joseph Got His Silver Bullets.

HELENA, Mont., Sept. 13 .- (Special.) -Cooke City, in Southeastern Montana, is evidently the Mocca of a party of surveyors for the Northern Pacific, and with the discovery of rich copper ore in one of its many mines, the famous early-day camp bids fair to achieve fame again. In connection with the history of Cooke City, two interesting stories are told.

Cooke City was named after Jay Cooke, the Eastern financier, In the early days it was noted as a silver producer, there being many very rich a vessel can be picked up for a distance s and a large smelter. At the time the Northern Pacific started to build westward from the Missouri River the residents of Bismarck were in the dark as to its destination. At an impromptu gathering this question was discussed. Man after man ventured an opinion, one that it would turn south and go to New Orleans; another to Portland; still another to Helena; another to Puget Sound and so on. Finally, one tall, lanky fellow opined that he knew positively, and, upon being questioned, stated that he had a letter from St. Paul declaring that Cooke City would be the terminus—"where there's enough ore in sight to keep busy all the cars the company has and then dians were most active in Montana, and among the generals who had given them battle was Philip Sheridan. Chief Joseph was in command of the rene-gade red men and a strategist indeed was he. At a time when Sheridan's chase was becoming rather warm, the Indians ran out of lead with which to manufacture bullets.

Chief Joseph was at that time in the vicinity of Cooke City, and he planned a raid on the smelter. This was most effectually carried out, and everything in the form of bullion was seized, and a portion of it was melted into bullets at the smelter. Incidentally, the reds took everything else that appeared valuable and was portable. Sheridan soon afterward had a skirmish with the marauders, and the re- in the Columbia River. Pilots L. Old Princess of Burma Valuly Begs Britain for Help.

CALCUTTA, Sept. 14.—(Special.)—Certain descendants of the late King of Burma are existing in Calcutta in the most miserable poverty on a mere pittance allowed them by the Indian Government. There is one old lady, in particular, whose only support is a few shillings a week. A short time ago she presented a petition to the Indian government to be allowed to return to her own country, where she believed that she would find friends who would at least help her to been hady and soul together. The patition keep body and soul together. The petition was summarily rejected by the Indian government. Her sympathizers contend that, seeing that the British government fliched her family's country from her, surely it behooves them to see that the poor woman does not die of starvation. Last year the gross profits on the re-served forests of Burma were estimated at 600,000 pounds sterling.

BECOMING

Is an ordeal which all women approach with indescribable fear, for nothing compares with the pain and horror of child-birth. The thought of the suffering and danger in store for her, robs the expectant mother of all pleasant anticipations of the coming event, and casts over her a shadow of gloom which cannot be shaken off.
