

SOUTHERN PACIFIC FULL OF EXCUSES

Railroad Under Fire for Curtailment of Its Service in Southern Oregon.

HEARING BY COMMISSION

State Board Turns Searchlight on Withdrawal of Passenger Trains 11 and 12 From the Portland-San Francisco Run.

Other than to say that "climatic conditions," the Harriman policy of retrenchment and an alleged lack of travel warranted the action, resident officials of the Southern Pacific company, who testified before the Oregon Railroad Commission in this city yesterday, had no defense to offer for the company in withdrawing passenger trains 11 and 12 from the Portland-San Francisco run and making Roseburg the southern terminal of those trains.

The inquiry, which ended yesterday with the meeting in the Wells Fargo building, included previous sessions at Ashland and Grants Pass. Commissioners C. E. Aitchison and Oswald West, who received the testimony at yesterday's hearing, will take the case under advisement and will not report their findings until they have had time to consider the many exhibits already offered and to be submitted by the railroad company which was represented by W. D. Fenton.

This investigation was initiated about a month ago, shortly following the announcement of the curtailed schedule of these trains on November 10, by the members of the commission. Immediately the plan was heartily indorsed by the residents of Grants Pass and Ashland who complained vigorously of the inadequacy of the train service in that section of the state. Involved in the investigation, which has taken on wider scope than was originally intended, are the questions of sufficiency of the train service furnished by the Southern Pacific Company in both directions between Portland and Ashland and the general convenience of the schedules now in effect.

Railroad's Witnesses Testify.

"Only socialists and anarchists are complaining of the revised schedule of these trains as they affect Southern Oregon," said J. D. Heard, of Medford, who was one of the witnesses for the railroad company yesterday, but when asked to give the names of such persons, the memory of the witness failed him and he refused to indict any of his fellow townsmen either as a socialist or an anarchist.

Several other residents of Medford and particularly of points in the Willamette Valley testified in a similar manner when questioned by either of the Railroad Commissioners it was quite apparent that they were prejudiced witnesses. It developed from their examination that their satisfaction with the new train schedule was due to the fact that since the train had been discontinued at Roseburg, it had been possible for the railroad company to furnish a more dependable service, the train rarely being late as was the case when the schedule was operated from Portland to San Francisco.

William McMurray, general passenger agent for the Harriman lines in Oregon, was the principal witness for the Southern Pacific at yesterday's hearing. In explaining why the company had found it expedient to convert trains 11 and 12 into a local train running from Portland to Roseburg and return, he said that under the former service climatic conditions had made it impossible for the company to operate these trains on time. Besides, he testified that a falling off in traffic and a necessary curtailment in expenses, together with a desire on the part of the company to give the people of Oregon a service on which they could depend, suggested the change that was made.

Another reason assigned by Mr. McMurray for cancelling the Harriman morning train from this city to San Francisco was the aversion of the traveling public to patronizing other than the night train, which, he said, made it impossible for the company to operate No. 11 at a profit.

Doesn't Know Volume of Traffic.

Mr. McMurray was asked to inform the Commission what the travel on No. 11 between Roseburg and Ashland and intermediate points amounted to when the old service was in effect, but he replied that the company's auditor had been unable to furnish him with the requested data. The company was able only to furnish statements showing the number of passengers carried between Grants Pass and Medford, but no figures were given touching on the traffic between Roseburg and Ashland, either north or southbound. In answer to a question as to the advisability of putting on a local train to run between these points and connect at Roseburg with trains 11 and 12, Mr. McMurray considered the plan would not solve the trouble, for the reason that such a train would have to leave Ashland between 2 and 3 A. M. in order to make connections.

Further to support his statements of the difficulty that was experienced by the Southern Pacific Company in profitably operating its morning California train out of this city, Mr. McMurray called attention to the schedule of the transcontinental roads operating out of Chicago showing that fifty-four-fifths of these trains leave that city after 5 P. M. daily. When reminded by Commissioner Aitchison that the Southern Pacific, under its new schedule, was running two trains to California at night and none in the morning, Mr. McMurray answered by saying that the morning train to Roseburg, a distance of 198 miles, was considered a long-distance train. The witness further testified that when trains 11 and 12 were running to California, Nos. 15 and 16 were required frequently to run in two sections in order to accommodate the business that would not take the morning train.
