Vain Hope for Cut in Price of Diamonds

Syndicate Will Maintain Selling Figures, Although Working Agreement Has Been Terminated.

AMERICAN millionaires who purchase gems, all down the line to buyers of "chips," who have been postponing their purchases of diamonds in the hope that the reported termination of the agreement between the big African diamond miners would result in "cheap" sparklers, must abandon the idea.

While the agreement that existed between the syndicate and the Premier Mining Company has terminated, advices received by diamond dealers in Portland are to the effect that values placed by London, which sets prices and fixes values on the diamond product of the world, will not be disarranged by the non-renewal of the agreement. The cablegram from London on the subject reads:

"Advices just given out by the Premier Mining Company and Diamond Syndicate, which control the output of the former, are that, even though the working agreement is not continued, prices will be maintained as heretofore."

Portland diamond dealers say, through one of their number, that the rumors of a break in the price had little effect on their trade, and that they have continued right along to replenish their stocks when they ran low and have held up the price to values established last year.

"About the customary business has been done," said the representative, "and we expect to continue on the basis established. About the normal amount of diamonds are being sold, so that we think the rumors of a break in values has had little, if any, effect on the local market."
