NO LONGER NEED TO POOL TRAFFIC

Roosevelt's Concession to the Railroads Received With Scorn.

OLD CONDITIONS ARE GONE

Pools Only Needed in Days of Rebates to Prevent Cutting by the Weak Lines — Rate Law Stopped All That.

WASHINGTON, April 11.—(Special.)—Influential railway presidents, both in the East and West, have taken the trouble to assure the National administration and the Interstate Commerce Commission that a pooling measure will be of no value to them. The railroad men have an idea that the President believes he is throwing a sop to them in his efforts to secure such an amendment of the Sherman act as will permit of the railroads pooling, and they do not want this impression to remain.

The railroad presidents will not do anything to defeat a pooling measure, but they view it with total indifference. The legalization of traffic associations and of agreements with respect to rates is what the railroad men are looking for and not a pooling measure.

Would Never Pool Again.

It is safe to say that if pooling should be permitted not a single pool would be established. The reason for this is simple and plain to the man who understands railroad affairs. The cause for pooling, if there ever was any true economic cause, has passed. In the old days of rebates and preferential rates, of discrimination and of midnight tariffs, the so-called "weak lines" had it in their power to inflict serious injury on the more stable and consequential railroad interests. By cutting rates and making perfectional agreements, the weak lines were enabled to scalp traffic and thus get along after a fashion. It was, in fact, about the only means they had to secure a fair share of the traffic.

Pools Helped Weak Roads.

For example, A. B. Stickney's Great Western road was always a thorn in the side of the strong lines between Chicago and the Twin Cities. In order to keep the Great Western from constantly demoralizing rates, the other lines from time to time organized traffic agreements and sometimes an out-and-out money pool. The pools guaranteed a certain percentage of the traffic or of the total revenue to each line, no matter how the total tonnage was routed.

So far as known, however, even in those days, pooling proved entirely unsatisfactory, because it was not a contract which could be enforced in the courts. As a result, the weak line usually got several hundred thousand dollars ahead of its proportion and then permitted the other roads to whistle for their money. In this manner nearly every pool ever organized was eventually broken up.

Rate Laws Make Rates Stable.

The Hepburn act has taken away from the weak lines, or from any line for that matter, the power to be a demoralizing factor in the rate and traffic world. It has brought about stability of rates and certainty of rates. A shipper now knows when he gets a quotation of a rate from one railroad that it is the going rate and that he can do no better over another road. No longer can the weak line take away traffic from the stronger line, which the latter would naturally secure except for underhand practices.

CHARLES A. WALKER DEAD

Had Been Engaged in Business Here Since 1896.

In the death of Charles A. Walker, which occurred at his home, 1209 Taggart street, Friday night, there passed away a well-known Portland business man. A month ago Mr. Walker suffered a stroke of paralysis, but it did not at the time seem serious, and he was soon able to be about the house. However, he continued to grow weaker, and for some time was in a comatose condition.

Mr. Walker was born in Manchester, N. H., June 2, 1854, and came to Portland April 19, 1896. He was salesman and afterwards manager for H. C. Breeden & Co., and then manager of the drapery department of Tull & Gibbs. Three years ago he became partner and manager of the Art Furniture Company, being associated with H. L. Chapin. He was also prominent in musical circles, and for six years was leader of the choir of Hawthorne Park Presbyterian Church, in which church he was an elder.

Mr. Walker was a member of Orient Lodge, I. O. O. F. He is survived by his wife and three children, Dr. C. E., Nina Marie and Margaret Walker, of Portland. The funeral will be held tomorrow afternoon at 1:30 o'clock, from Hawthorne Park Presbyterian Church, East Twelfth and East Taylor streets.

REALTY MEN HAVE OUTING

BOARD MEMBERS SPEND AFTERNOON AT WAVERLEIGH.

Crowd of 200 Witnesses Flagpole Raising, Hears Speeches and Partakes of Luncheon.

Two special cars, a tallyho and two automobiles were required to convey 200 members of the Portland Realty Board and a number of their families to Waverleigh yesterday afternoon. The special cars left Third and Yamhill streets at 3 o'clock, and with a brass band playing lively airs in the first car the excursionists were taken across the Morrison bridge to Grand avenue, then turning to the southeast, soon pulled up at the edge of what has become known as "Beautiful Waverleigh."

Banners hanging along the sides of the cars announced that the occupants were on their way to Waverleigh as the guests of John P. Sharkey & Co., who have the tract in hand. Soon after getting under way, cigars were passed around and following that representatives of the firm gave to each of its guests a handsome aluminum cardcase. Previous to starting, each member of the party was given a handsome badge, on which was printed: "Portland Realty Board Excursion to Waverleigh, April 11, 1908." All these attentions, together with the transportation, were extended by Mr. Sharkey and his associates.

Arriving at Waverleigh, the visitors were escorted from the cars to the elevated spot, where the company's office is located, and here one of the most inspiring features of the trip was enacted. Surrounding the lot on which the office is erected, the crowd stood bareheaded while the band played "The Star-Spangled Banner" and "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," and watched with interest and accumulating enthusiasm the erection of a steel flagpole, and when the pole rested in the concrete receptacle and the colors floated out on the gentle breeze a cheer went up that must have been heard for miles.

Mr. Sharkey then stepped on a mound facing the crowd and welcomed his guests to Waverleigh, closing by introducing Tom Richardson as the exponent of Portland progressiveness. Mr. Richardson took as his theme the raising of the American flag on the spot, and delivered a panegyric that again set the crowd cheering. He referred to the beauties of the tract and its favored situation, affording as it does a wide sweep of view of the districts north, south and west.

The visitors then scattered over the big tract, examining the street work under way and completed, and the residences under course of erection, finally gathering at a tent midway in the grounds, where a lunch of salads, sandwiches, punch, coffee and relishes was served by a dozen waiters from Sargent's.

Drawn up alongside the lunch tent a tallyho was utilized as a speaker's stand and when Mr. Sharkey stepped up he introduced W. L. Boise, who talked of the change that had taken place in the development of Portland. "There was a time," said he, "when everything in the way of property belonged to the old residents of the place and there was little development. Now have come along men of affairs and money from the great centers of the country, and even from Seattle, seeing the opportunities offered here. They invested their capital in our steam and street railway systems, reaching out in all directions, until the City of Portland under the new regime can no longer be called slow. Our own people, to be sure, were not long in seeing for the first time what had been under their noses undetected for so many years, and now it has come to pass that the old ways are gone forever and Portland has awakened to a realization of her resources. The platting of this beautiful tract is one of the evidences of that awakening."

J. Whyte Evans was then introduced and spoke of the necessity of men in any business enterprise sticking together and working for the common good of all, if they would accomplish the greatest good. In introducing his subject he spoke in an apologetic way of the fact that he had made but two previous trips to the East Side since coming to Portland, whereupon Mrs. Woodcock, who stood in the crowd listening, interjected the remark: "That's where you've been losing money."

Walter Thomas Mills told of having been in all the principal cities of the country, and had spent his time traveling for the past 30 years. When he came to Portland and visited the Waverleigh tract he felt satisfied that at last he had found the spot where he could settle down and live in peace and comfort for the remainder of his days.

Mr. Mills has secured about five acres on the tract, on which he is negotiating for the erection of a model apartment-house where tenants are to be families with growing children, the opposite of the rule obtaining in city apartments. He exhibited a drawing, showing the perspective of the proposed building, which is in the Mission style of architecture.

William Reidt closed the speech-making in lauding the suburban tracts around the city, particularly referring to Waverleigh.

President Fries, of the Realty Board, then thanked Mr. Sharkey on behalf of the board and proposed cheers, which were given with a will.

No definite announcement was made as to the programme for next Saturday, though a trip to Portland Heights and another to the Hood River country are mentioned as probabilities in the near future.

DRUG FIEND'S QUEER DEATH

Portland Woman Under Opiates Is Killed by Train at San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 11.—(Special.)—A request from Portland for information as to the tragic death of Mrs. Ida Thompson, the young woman who was killed by the Southern Pacific overland train near the entrance to the race track in Emeryville last Sunday, has led the police to begin an investigation of the case. The Chief of Police in Portland received a telegram from Oakland two days ago, which read:

"Tell Mrs. Patton that her daughter, Ida, was killed in Oakland.

"T. V. THOMPSON."

This telegram was sent to Chief Wilson, of Oakland, today, with a request for more information. The only identification which the authorities had been able to obtain at the time of the accident was that given by a negro, William Jackson, of 1547 Fifth street. He saw the remains at the morgue and said they were those of Mrs. Maude Thompson. He was unable to give more information about the woman, but said he believed she was addicted to the use of drugs.

While Mrs. Thompson was being operated on at the receiving hospital, Dr. Irwin declared that she was under the influence of opiates, but she was in such a low condition that she could not talk of her condition or of the accident. That night she died and it was only through the identification of the negro that the Coroner found her husband, Thomas V. Thompson. Thompson testified at the inquest that the woman had started for a picnic at Shellmound Park and she and three companions, it is said, were walking to that place when the train struck her.

Railroad officers who investigated the case have been informed that three companions of the woman—two men and a woman—ran away when they saw her hit by the engine. These witnesses have not been found.

WEATHER CONDITIONS.

The high area overlying the North Pacific Coast remains stationary, but is steadily diminishing in energy, the pressure having fallen decidedly over the entire Western half of the country during the last 12 hours. Clear skies, however, prevail over the Pacific Slope and the plateau region, excepting along the immediate Coast, where cloudiness is reported. No rain was reported excepting a small amount at Tatoosh Island. Temperatures were decidedly above the seasonal average excepting along the Coast.

The indications are for showers Sunday in Western Oregon and Western Washington, and for fair weather east of the Cascade Mountains.
