publican County Central Committee is friendly to H. M. Cake, candidate for United States Senator, who will be consulted in the selection of a chairman to succeed C. M. Ideman. The control of the organization has been gained by the Union Republican Club as opposed to F. E. Reed, although Reed was elected a member of the committee from his own precinct, defeating R. C. Robbins. Candidates for precinct committees in the interests of the prospective Reed machine were defeated in nearly every other precinct in the county. The newly-elected committee will meet next week and organize for the campaign by electing a chairman and a secretary. It is possible that Max G. Olson, secretary of the Union Republican Club, may be made secretary of the county organization. Olson was defeated for precinct committeeman from his precinct by T. W. Whitton, but this does not disqualify Olson from being secretary of the County Central Committee.

New Storage Battery. Edison Has One to Furnish Power for 100-Mile Auto Tour. Washington (D. C.) Post. The announcement by Thomas A. Edison that he has perfected a storage battery that will furnish power enough to a large automobile to run 100 miles will be of more interest in some parts of the country than his statement that his workingman's concrete palace is a success. There are drawbacks to the construction of a concrete palace in one place, even if it is very cheap. The high price of city lots, for instance, is not overcome by the cheap building invented by Edison. But if he has perfected a storage battery that will run a vehicle 100 miles at very small expense, he has conferred an inestimable blessing upon mankind. In all portions of the United States, but particularly in the West and South, are stretches of good country, sparsely inhabited, where the connection is made with the outside world only by horse-drawn vehicles. The roads are poor and lilly, and the scant population does not justify the construction of railroads. If a cheap and faster method of locomotion can be applied to those regions, it will work wonders for civilization. The mails would be facilitated, and passengers could be carried in inclosed automobiles, warmed and lighted, if necessary, thereby making these remote sections almost as accessible as if they were penetrated by railroads. Settlements would spring up and progressive would compel the construction of railroads. The stage coach, which still lingers, would disappear, and improved roads would reduce the cost of getting farm products to market. The farm wagon as a transport of crops would not be profitable. In many parts of the country the construction of long-distance power systems is an important feature, but new areas of electricity. Water stored in the hills is made to produce electricity, which is conveyed hundreds of miles to turn wheels in small cities. As these electric power lines are constructed it is very probable that automobile lines will accompany them, provided the new storage battery is realized. The power line would furnish power to the motor batteries wherever along the line, thus supplanting the old-fashioned stage station with storage-battery stations and enabling the automobiles to negotiate the steep hills on either side of the power line, opening up vast stretches of country to easy communication. Thus Mr. Edison's battery may be the means of solving a link between horse and rail that will greatly hasten the development of new regions, and add enormously to the wealth of the country.

DEAD OF THE NORTHWEST Mrs. Eleanor Darr, Who Told Incidents of Pioneer Hardships.

MINNIVILLE, Or., April 18.—(Special.)—Mrs. Eleanor Darr, a Yamhill County pioneer of 1844, died at her home two miles southeast of Dayton, Mrs. Darr was born in Lees County, Va., November 4, 1826, being the youngest daughter of the late Joel Christian and wife, and accompanying the family to Oregon in 1844. Her husband died in 1855, and three years later she was married to Addison Darr, who died about 14 years ago. Mrs. Darr is survived by three children of her first marriage and two of the second. She is said to have the distinction of being the last one of the pioneers of 1844 to have lived to this date on the family donation land claim, to which she gained title. She loved the old farm and took great pleasure in relating the incidents of the family's first year in Yamhill County. There were seven children in the family, and after building a cabin, they all joined in putting in 10 acres of wheat. With an extemporized scythe blade and their fingers they harvested the first grain, which was afterward laid on the ground and threshed out by allowing the oxen to tramp over it. In this tedious fashion they thrashed 40 bushels to the acre, the portion used for family sustenance being first chaffed and then ground in a coffee mill.
