Royal Sisters Visit Famous Show
Palaces of City, Including Repository of J. Pierpont
Morgan's Art Treasures.

LONDON, May 2.—(Special.)—Queen Alexandra took her sister, the Dowager Empress of Russia, about London to see the sights during her visit just as if they were a pair of ordinary tourists. The two evidently enjoy each other's company extremely. The Tsarina has seen more of London and the surrounding country while jaunting with the Queen of England in the royal automobile than in her state visits hedged round with etiquette. They motored from Windsor to Lord Rosebery's beautiful Mentmore estate, an easy run, which came to him with his wife, Hannah Rothschild. It is one of a group of Rothschild country properties magnificently kept up. Another day they went to the Earl's place at Epsom, close to the Derby course; the Durdams, where they had lunch with Lord Rosebery, who is such a favorite with the English royal family that it is rather surprising that the peer-widower did not become the King's son-in-law. The Queen and Empress had also been to dine with him in the characteristic house he built himself in Berkeley Square, just as they were entertained by J. Pierpont Morgan when they went to view his art treasures. The same interest which the royal sisters showed in the Morgan curios, pictures, manuscripts, and bric-a-brac was manifested by them during the hour or two they spent in the British Museum, that goal of so many American travelers and students. Most of the time was passed in the manuscript room over the autographs of former Kings of England and their kin. Among the exhibits over which they lingered longest were the copybooks of some of these royal personages.

SOUND KNELL OF CAMERA

Latest Photographic Plates Need No
Apparatus or Lens.

LONDON, April 25.—Photographers will soon be able to dispense with cameras. As a result of a wonderful invention of Professor Lippmann it will be possible, after merely exposing a plate before the object to be photographed, to obtain, on developing it, more lifelike representation than can possibly be produced by present-day methods. For many months Professor Lippmann, who is already famous as the inventor of the only direct process of color photography which gives perfect results, has been at work on his new invention at the research laboratory of the Paris university in the Sorbonne. Great difficulty has been, and is still, experienced in the manufacture of the wonderful plates, which are at present largely made by hand. The plate is, in reality, an immense honeycomb with tiny holes, about 1,000 microscopic lenses being packed in each square inch of it. These tiny lenses, each separated from the surrounding ones by a black or opaque substance, produce each its own little photograph on the portion of sensitive film immediately behind it. The human eye, however, has the most extraordinary power of adapting itself to circumstances, and when the developed plate is examined one point only of each small image is seen by the eye, the sum total of these points forming a stereoscopic picture. Professor Lippmann is modest in his claims for the new invention, owing to the fact that such difficulty is at present experienced in making the plates, but when once these can be turned out on a commercial scale the art of photography will be completely revolutionized. The photographs of the future will carry his plates in little boxes, and, placing them in front of anything he wishes to take, remove the lid or shutter from the box, and then develop them in the ordinary way.

Mme. Anna Gould Gives Views on International Marriages.

PARIS, April 25.—Mme. Anna Gould's ideas on international marriages were printed today in the Journal, the Naples correspondent of which quotes her as follows: "France represents the height of elegance because we have none at home. In America the wife spends freely what the husband earns; in France the reverse is true. European marriages raise Americans above their ordinary life. We look for our ideal on the continent. In the French people we have all that is lacking in ourselves, but we are often surprised to find we have admired exactly what is wanting in the objects of our admiration." At Naples it is assiduously reported that Mme. Gould and Prince Helle de Sagan will be married soon in Florence. Mme. Gould has deposited $100,000 in the Bank of Naples. She brought all her jewels, automobiles, and a mountain of baggage.

FINE HANDEL HARPSICHORD

Work of Art Made by Andreas Ruckers in 1614.

LONDON, April 25.—A new Scottish expedition to the Antarctic is being planned by Dr. William S. Bruce of the Scottish Oceanographical laboratory, who returned from a journey to the Arctic last summer. Dr. Bruce proposes to follow and extend the deep sea investigations made by the Scotia in the South Atlantic, Weddell, and Eiscoe seas, and to attempt to cross the Antarctic continent.
