KAISER PLANS TO VISIT JERUSALEM

Presence Will Lend Glory to Opening of Kaiserin's Home for Pilgrims.

SULTAN ALSO MAY ATTEND

German Ruler's Invitation Hardly to Be Declined, Though Abdul Hamid Is in Mortal Fear When Outside His Own Palace.

BERLIN, July 4.—(Special.)—The old city of Jerusalem is to be honored with a visit from the Kaiser and Empress and although it will be nearly two years before the start will be made the Kaiser has already begun to plan the details. The ruler of the German empire will not go to Palestine as a humble pilgrim, as did many of his forefathers, he will be driven by no desire to pray in the church of the Holy Sepulchre, but will go as a mighty monarch who wants to lend glory to the solemn opening of the Home for Pilgrims, founded by the Empress and bearing her name. This opening is to take place some time during the spring of 1910.

When the cornerstone of the building was laid on March 21, last year, the Imperial couple were represented by the Court Chaplain, Dr. Dryander, and Baron von Mirbach, who was the personal representative of the Kaiser. The ceremony took place in the presence of the Governor of Jerusalem and a representative of the Sultan of Turkey of whose empire the province of Palestine is a part. It was quite impressive, but far from enough so to satisfy the Kaiser and he therefore wants to throw splendor upon the dedication of the Home by his personal presence and will endeavor to induce the Sultan to come, too, though it is more than doubtful if he will succeed in this. For Abdul Hamid trembles to leave Yildiz Kiosk and fears for his life as soon as he is outside the palace walls.

The Kaiser, on the other side, has too often proved a felon in need to the ruler of the faithful and his wish cannot easily be slighted. Qui vivra, verra!

MARTYR TO HIS VANITY

French Scientist Describes Strange Case of Morbid Mentality.

PARIS, July 4.—(Special.)—A curious sort of vanity was described at the meeting of the French Academy of Medicine on Thursday, when Professor Deulafoi detailed the case of a man who for over two years had been afflicted with ulcerous sores, which broke out on both arms. The patient consulted over a dozen physicians and tried many varieties of treatment, without relief. Finally he submitted to the amputation of his left arm above the elbow. Some improvement followed, but later the sores made their appearance with greater frequency than ever. He was then admitted to the Hotel Dieu and placed under Professor Deulafoi's care. After keeping the patient under close observation for some time, the professor declared the patient to be a simulator. The man admitted that he had been in the habit of producing sores with caustic potash, and had kept up the fraud for two years and a half. Professor Deulafoi explains the case as one of morbid mentality, in which the victim is irresistibly impelled to disfigure himself in order that he may become interesting and an object of pity.

SINGS SONGS OF ROYALTY

Miss Alys Lorraine Gives Remarkable Recital in London.

LONDON, July 4.—(Special.)—Royal compositions formed the entire programme of a song recital given here by Miss Alys Lorraine, the well-known operatic singer. Every song she sang was composed by an emperor, king, queen, prince, princess or reigning duke ranging in date from Henry VIII to the present Kaiser Wilhelm. Three songs composed by "Bluff King Hal" opened the concert followed by one by King Charles I. Then Miss Lorraine sang a cavatina by King Anthony the Good, of Saxony, a song by his relative Princess Louise, a song by Henri IV, of Navarre and one by the unhappy Queen Marie Antoinette. The Kaiser's "Sang an Aegir" began the second part of the concert which also included two compositions by Duke Ernest II, of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, and three works by his brother the prince consort of the late Queen Victoria, of England. The concert ended with four ballads composed by Princess Henry, of Battenberg.

CZAR TO VISIT ENGLAND

Will Occupy King's Beautiful Home at Norfolk.

LONDON, July 4.—(Special.)—The czar of Russia has announced his intention of visiting England this Fall and will stay for some time at Sandringham. The King's beautiful Norfolk home is being specially prepared for the Queen's nephew, who will come accompanied by the Czarina and all his children. How long the czar is to stay in England has not yet been decided, but he will take part in a week's shooting over the splendid Sandringham preserves and most likely the Imperial family will remain here long enough to be present at the celebration of King Edward's birthday, in November.

DEFENDS QUEEN'S HONOR

Chivalrous Frenchman Challenges Detractor of Amice of Portugal.

PARIS, July 4.—(Special.)—That Frenchmen are no less chivalrous today than they were in the times when Knights were bold has just been proved by M. Breilmayer, the famous swordsman and fencing master, who having recently been presented to Queen Amelie, of Portugal, by birth a princess of Orleans, found it his duty to bare his sword in defense of her honor.

KAISER PLANS TO VISIT JERUSALEM

In the "Action" there has recently appeared a serial story which under the guise of fiction dealing with Portuguese life made scurrilous attacks against the Queen of that country who is greatly beloved in France because of her heroism (she saved several persons from drowning at the risk of her own life). The author was a certain Portuguese writer Senor Albaynergue, who had been expelled from his native country because of his anarchistic tendencies.

M. Breilmayer wrote to the author calling him a disgraceful coward for his attack upon a woman and the letter was published in the Paris papers. The writer who had always posed as a man who did not know fear replied that he would challenge M. Breilmayer and if the latter should refuse he would horse whip him in the street and shoot him down like a dog.

The challenge never came, however, and when M. Breilmayer avowed in a letter to find the Portuguese at his apartments he had disappeared and the rest of the serial will never appear.

GZAR PARDONS A REBEL

ACTS ON HIS OWN INITIATIVE IN REMARKABLE CASE.

Beneficiary Soldier, Who Was Shot as Traitor During Baltic Revolt, but Not Killed.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 4.—(Special.)—Although the Russian Senate Court of Appeals refused to present a petition for a pardon, Czar Nicholas has on his own initiative pardoned an ex-soldier, Lust, who, after being legally dead for two years, showed up again and was sentenced to two years hard labor in the Siberian mines. During the revolt of 1905 in the Baltic provinces Lust was sentenced to death by court-martial. The next day he was taken out for execution, a platoon of his comrades firing a volley at him as he stood against a tree. Incredible as it may seem, Lust, with 12 bullets in his body, was not mortally wounded.

Fortunately for him, the soldiers did not want to bury him, and after a long while, when the faintness caused by loss of blood had to some extent passed away, he was able to crawl to a hut near by. His condition was desperate, for his wounds were of a terrible character, but the old woman who was the sole occupant of the hut was an excellent nurse, and tended him with the greatest devotion.

For many months Lust lay between life and death and for two years he was unable to leave the hut, during which time the old woman successfully guarded her secret. At last he was able to go out, but was immediately recognized by the local police, who arrested him. The court of justice before which he was brought sentenced him to two years' penal servitude, with a recommendation for mercy in view of his great sufferings.

The board of pardons having refused to act, the poor man was about to be deported to Siberia when he was privately brought to the attention of the czar and a pardon followed.

HARVEST YANKEE DOLLARS

ENGLISH TOWNS GIVE PAGEANTS FOR TOURISTS.

Four Historic Cities Present Gorgeous Spectacles Based on Incidents of Middle Ages.

LONDON, July 4.—(Special.)—"Pageantitis," in other words, a desire to get hold of American dollars by arranging pageants for the benefit of American visitors, has a firmer hold upon England than ever. The number of historic towns that are having pageants this year is four, including one London suburb. London itself had arranged to have a pageant which was to have been the greatest of all, but it has been postponed until next Summer, so as not to interfere with the success of the Franco-British exposition.

Dover and Winchester two ancient towns whose history goes far back into the dim ages are having pageants in which the many historical incidents connected with them will be reproduced. Winchelsea, in Sussex, with its ruined Norman castle and memories of the great battle of Hastings has also a pageant on a smaller scale. An unusual feature of the Dover show will be that one episode will be spoken in French, written by Louis Thiercelin, the noted French poet. It shows the meeting of Charles I with his French bride, Henrietta Maria.

Chelsea, the picturesque, artistic suburb on the Thames is another pageant town this year. The borough is rich in associations with Sir Thomas Moore, Charles II and Neil Gwynne, and coming to the nineteenth century with Turner, Carlyle and Rossetti.

KING REPELS AN INVASION

Victor Emanuel Staves Off Visit of Wife's Poor Relations.

ROME, July 4.—(Special.)—King Victor Emanuel, who is not on the best of terms with his wife's relatives, has neatly got the best of them in a little scheme devised to invade Rome. Queen Helena's brothers and sisters, the Montenegrin princes and princesses have made the king very tired by their frequent visits to this city where they ran up long bills and left him to settle. Recently several members of the princely Montenegrin family discovered that their teeth needed attention and decided that no dentist but Dr. Webb, the American who looks after the teeth of the Italian royal family, would be good enough, so they planned another visit to Rome.

King Victor Emanuel happened to hear of it and immediately ordered Dr. Webb to go to Montenegro and attend the princely patients at their own home. In this way he very cleverly spoiled the plans of his sisters and brothers-in-law, who had intended to spend several weeks in Italy.

SOCIETY THUGS SHOCK GERMANY

Sons of Wealthy German Families Turn Out to Be Skillful Burglars.

THIRTY HELD FOR TRIAL

Scandal Shocks Upper Crust of Secluded German Capital—One Friend of Kaiser Is Caught in Dragnet.

BERLIN, July 4.—(Special.)—The arrest of a number of young men all belonging to the most prominent families of the city accused of being common burglars has created an immense sensation here. The most heroic efforts are being made to have the matter hushed up, but the authorities refuse to listen and in a very few days the socially prominent criminals will have to plead. That they will plead not guilty is certain, but the police are sure to have more than proofs enough to convict at least a dozen of them.

For some time past the police had been baffled by a series of mysterious burglaries which bore evidence of not having been committed by the usual class of burglars. Several persons who were suspected of being implicated were shadowed and at last a number of very expensive panama hats of a grade worn only by people of means gave the police a clew to work on.

A number of arrests were made with the greatest caution that the various members of the gang should not be able to warn each other and at last more than 20 young men all belonging to socially prominent families were behind the bars.

Son of Millionaire.

One of the accused, who it is said has promised to turn informer if promised immunity, is the son of a millionaire manufacturer who is often invited to court festivities and who is quite popular with the Kaiser. The young man says he was prompted to steal because the pocket money given him by his father would not suffice to pay for his passions for women and wine. He was seen squandering money almost nightly in music halls and variety theaters, but as his family was known to be immensely wealthy he was suspected of getting the money in a dishonest manner. His offer to turn King's evidence will not be accepted and if convicted he will have to take his punishment.

Another sensational case is now before the Criminal Court is the trial of a young man of 30 who has confessed to having killed his own father, the Forster Schwarzenstein, in January last. The defense is temporary insanity.

Traced by Bloodhounds.

In the night between the 22d and 23d of January last the old forester was found shot dead near his residence in the Mueggelsee forest. At first it was thought he had been killed by a poacher he had surprised, but bloodhounds which were employed took the detectives to the murdered man's own house, where the young man had been home alone on the night of the murder. At first he swore he was innocent, but third-degree methods wore him out, and when he was asked to swear to his innocence with his hand on his father's mortal wound, he broke down and confessed. As motive of the murder he said that his father had refused to give him money to spend in dissipation.

MAKES BIRD THAT FLIES

French Inventor Thinks He Has Solved Problem of Aeroplane.

PARIS, July 4.—(Special.)—M. Marcel Deprez, member of the Institute of France, has invented an aluminum bird which rises against the wind and stays in the air without being sustained by any mechanical device. Deprez explains that his experiment was entirely based upon his observation of an eagle rising against the wind and soaring aloft without any motion of its wings. The solution, he adds, is very simple. The aluminum bird consists of two planes, one large and almost horizontal, and another smaller and almost vertical, resembling in shape a visiting card with one end bent back. This aluminum sheet is inclined slightly against the horizon, a current of air, some what ascendant in direction is brought to bear against it, and the metal bird rises and remains suspended in the air.

As soon as it can be practically applied M. Deprez thinks this invention will greatly simplify aeronautics and will, moreover, mean a simplification of construction and a great economy in the force necessary to propel airships and a considerable increase of their staying powers.

LINKS THEM BY MARRIAGE

Chinese Empress Forces Rival Families to Make Peace.

SHANGHAI, China, July 4.—(Special.)—The Chinese Empress Dowager has characteristic and diplomatic way of making peace when the heads of rival factions fall out. She issues the command that their families shall be united by marriage. In this way she has restored harmonious relations between Yuan Shih Kai and Chang Chi Tang, leaders of the progressive and conservative parties. When both statesmen were present at a conference before her throne the Empress suddenly announced that it was her wish that their youngest son and daughter should be betrothed, and although both men were furious, they were too much afraid of losing their heads and accordingly a marriage was immediately arranged.

About a year ago the Empress in the same way made peace between Yuan Shih Kai and Tish Lang, who were political rivals. The latter was commanded to give one of his daughters in marriage to the former's son.
