KAISER BELIEVER IN SPIRITUALISM

Maximilian Harden, Who Revealed Zu Eulenberg Scandal, Makes Charge.

BERLIN IS IN UPROAR

Fearless Editor of Zukunft Says Emperor's Policies Often Have Been Dictated by Voices of Dead.

BERLIN, July 11.—(Special).—That the Kaiser, as at one time was Czar Nicholas of Russia, is a firm believer in spiritualism and that his policies, at least at times, have largely been dictated by spirits, is the amazing statement made by Maximilian Harden, the famous editor of the Zukunft, whose revelations started the Prince Eulenberg scandal. Harden, who is absolutely fearless and who has never retracted anything he has said, was interviewed the other day, and it was then that he made the statement which now, since it has been published, has aroused such a tremendous sensation here that people talk of little else.

Speaking of the spiritual atmosphere of the Liebenberg "Tafelrunde," of the numerous seances in which even the late Kaiser Wilhelm took part, Harden declares that these had a very harmful influence upon the present Kaiser, who has always been inclined towards mysticism.

For a long time the Kaiser always consulted the spirits about matters of state and wore his watch in a piece of cloth which a spirit had left after a seance at Prince Eulenberg's house.

So far no official notice has been taken of Harden's astonishing statement, but with the sensation it has stirred up it is almost impossible to suppose the Kaiser could afford not to deny the allegations made. No one, however, believes that the daring editor is lying, and it is known that he possesses knowledge of certain affairs which, if revealed, would scandalize certain high personages at court.

Fearless Editor of Zukunft Says Emperor's Policies Often Have Been Dictated by Voices of Dead.

TRAJAN, bound for Constanta, intending to proceed from that port to Iassy and to travel thence with his wife to Russia. The news of his departure having been telegraphed by spies straight to Yildiz Kiosk strict orders were issued that he was to be put ashore at any coast either at Smyrna or at Constantinople. "A deputation met the colonel at Smyrna assuring him that the Sultan had pardoned him, but he refused to leave the boat. At Constantinople the colonel was met by a Lieutenant of the Imperial Guard who again assured him that he had been pardoned and at the same time promoted to the rank of a general. Zaur Ahmed Bey, however, rejected the Sultan's generosity and refused to speak to the Imperial envoy.

After this failure the Turkish government in embarrassment applied to the Roumanian government, asking that the colonel as a political refugee should not be allowed to leave Constantinople on a Roumanian boat. After an agitated stay of seven hours at Constantinople the Trajan was released at 9 o'clock in the evening at the receipt of the following telegram from Bucharest: "By order of His Majesty King Charles the Trajan is to leave immediately with the political refugee."

Indescribable enthusiasm was aroused among the passengers at the receipt of the order which undoubtedly saved the officer's life.

LOVE CAUSE OF TRAGIC CLIMAX

Italian Romances Lead to Appeal to Firearms With Fatal Results.

INJURED HUSBAND KILLED

Shot by Wife's Paramour While in Act of Forgiving Her for Infidelity — Marquis Another Victim.

ROME, July 11.—(Special).—Two beautiful women of title figure as principals in two sensational love dramas which have occurred in Northern Italy. Countess Ginevra Bentivoglio, who belongs to a very old and once powerful Bologna family and is barely 21 years of age, has been involved in one of these. She was taken straight from a convent three years ago and married to a Masala wine dealer named Lepagita. The couple lived in a small flat in Bologna, where they had a servant, taking their meals in a nearby restaurant. Their only child had been put out to be raised by peasants in the mountains.

A young Venetian magistrate, named Paternoster, came to Bologna, was struck by the Countess' beauty and laid siege to her heart, finally persuading her to elope with him. The Countess, making the pretense of a trip to Sicily for a prolonged stay with a relative, joined Paternoster in Rome, whence, after despatching a batch of letters bearing the Naples and Palermo postmarks, the runaway couple took a train for Paris. They stayed here about two weeks and, as their funds were giving out, they moved to Lugano. When they had no more money the Countess became penitent and telegraphed her husband that she was ready to come home to beg his forgiveness, and also appealed to a local lawyer-friend to intervene in her behalf.

The distressed husband, who meanwhile had been waiting in vain for the return of his wife, was telegraphed to return to Lugano and, despite the deplorable demeanor of Paternoster, who threatened to kill her and commit suicide, succeeded in escorting her to Milan, where he telegraphed to the husband to meet her the same evening. Paternoster followed them and lay in wait for his wife, but he caught sight of the unfortunate husband than he assailed him furiously and then mortally wounded him with two shots. He was immediately arrested.

The Marchese Corradi, who has been shot dead by the husband of a beautiful society lady, is the victim of the other tragedy. On rising one morning the husband caught his wife in an adjoining room in the act of writing a passionate love letter to the Marquis. The wife threw the unfinished missive out of the window to prevent her husband from seeing it, but he rushed downstairs in the street and picked it up.

After reading it he went with a loaded revolver to a neighboring hotel and killed the marquis in the lobby. He then fled to the woods, but was caught the next morning, while creeping back to his home. These two episodes, a striking development of the case, Signora Fanny Zaccaria herself (this was the name of the unfaithful wife) though seriously ill in bed, was obliged to give an account of being an accomplice in the murder of the marquis. The police hint that there is a further mystery in the affair which they cannot yet divulge.

A curious feature of the case is the fact that Mme. Zaccaria was due to appear in court at Lecce next week in connection with the independent candidate against a woman in whose company she had surprised her husband some time ago. It is stated that when Mme. Zaccaria confessed her infidelity to her husband he presented her with a small revolver and told her to shoot herself. Mustering her resolution she kissed her husband, closed her eyes, and exclaiming "All is over," fired a shot through the ceiling.

FEAR KITCHENER'S RETURN

Persons High in Authority Would Keep Him in Exile.

LONDON, July 11.—(Special).—There is a lot of intrigues going on just now with the object of keeping Lord Kitchener away from this country and sending him on another tour of foreign service when his term in India expires in November next. The reason that Lord Kitchener is not wanted here is partly the stern uncompromising way he acted in South Africa during the Boer war which has made him very unpopular with many officers of aristocratic families who wanted to treat the war as a picnic and who were made to toe the mark by the commander-in-chief. Another even more serious reason is that there is not the slightest doubt that if Lord Kitchener joined the army council he would bring to light many things which are the greatest desire of keeping secret and some high officials would have a very uncomfortable time of it.

The influence of several society ladies of the first importance has been invoked in order to keep Kitchener abroad and it is now being suggested that he should be offered the governorship of one of the Australian colonies, but it is almost certain that he would refuse to accept an office where he would be unable to keep in touch with army affairs. He is too much of a soldier for that.

MEANS CHEAPER STEEL

Foreigners Forced to Establish Plants in England.

LONDON, July 11.—(Special).—The establishment of many large steel plants in Great Britain in order to comply with the new patents act will be one of the immediate outcomes of the formation of the International Steel Trust. American and German steel magnates who have been active in forming this immense concern have been interviewed and all agree that it will be only a few weeks before the scheme will be carried into execution. The trust which has its headquarters in this city has already had applications from practically every steel manufacturing center in the world and is now actively engaged in deciding upon a plan by which it can arrange an output serviceable for both export and import purposes.

The additional capital of the combine will amount to $50,000,000 and the "Iron and Steel Trades Journal" states authoritatively that several of the Russian and German syndicates allied with the combine are negotiating for the construction of a new plant in which they will give employment to many thousands of men and will have the effect of cheapening steel generally.

Fire Drives 200 Into Street.

SEATTLE, Wash., July 11.—Two hundred persons rendered homeless and eight buildings burned and contents destroyed, causing a loss estimated at $69,000, is the result of a fire starting in a vacant frame house this morning. For more than an hour seven fire companies, aided by 50 men with a hydraulic giant engaged in snuffing operations on Beacon Hill, worked to save buildings in the neighborhood before the flames were under control. The occupants made homeless are mostly Japanese, although a few negroes and white persons lived in the burned district.

Dallas Ready for Elks.

DALLAS, Texas, July 11.—With a myriad of incandescent lights and fantastically garbed in flags and varicolored bunting, Dallas is in readiness to receive her guests, the vast army of the Elks of America, who will meet in annual session on Monday. It is estimated that fully 20,000 visitors will have arrived before nightfall on Monday.

ROMAN WITCH ARRESTED

GAINED GREAT WEALTH BY PRACTICE OF BLACK ART.

Police Gain Access to House of Mystery Through Strategy—Make Queer Discoveries.

ROME, July 11.—(Special).—In a modest house hidden in a maze of alleys in a suburb of Perugia strange ceremonies, rites are celebrated. The house was frequented by women of the town and now and again some damsel who had been crossed in love or some wife who was jealous of her husband. The police heard vague rumors of the proceedings, but had not until now succeeded in probing the mystery.

A chauffeur, who was accompanied by a groom carrying under his arm a bundle of papers, one day this week stopped his car opposite the mysterious house, the doors of which were closed. The car had apparently broken down. The chauffeur and the groom, who were really police agents in disguise, left their machine and knocked at the door to ask all at his disposal as he desired to see a pair of piers. The door was opened by a woman who, suspecting nothing, was going in search of the desired implement, when the two men held her back, entered the house and slammed the door in her face.

Strange and terrible was the aspect of the interior. The walls were hung with mysterious symbols, human skulls and cross bones, bottles, large and small, swords of strange shapes, heads of dogs, cats and other animals. In fact, all the traditional implements of medieval witchcraft. A thorough search was made and several books were found containing a quantity of invocations to the evil one.

The sorceress, a woman of about 50, who possesses a vast property purchased with the money she had wheedled from her credulous customers, was arrested and carried away in the automobile. Her trial will reveal many interesting facts about witchcraft in Perugia.

KING EDWARD GROWS OLD

No Longer Able to Bear Hardships of Travel.

LONDON, July 11.—(Special).—That King Edward is no longer as young as he has been was painfully evident judging from the condition in which he returned to London the night before last after a three days' journey to Leeds and Bristol. While Queen Alexandra who accompanied the King was as fresh and bright as ever, and did not seem to have minded the trip at all, King Edward was barely able to walk from the railroad-car to his carriage and it will be necessary for him to take several weeks' complete rest which he will probably spend at Brighton where the air is very beneficial to him.

The Queen will not accompany her husband but intends to spend as much of her time at her bungalow until she goes to Denmark to stay for several weeks with her sister the Dowager Empress of Russia at the villa they have bought between Copenhagen and Elsinore.
