The Hemlock Spruce.

The hemiock spruce is one of the most beautiful evergreens for orna-mental hedges. It is hardy and when neatly trimmed is really handsome. It is not well located when planted along the line of the street in a town, as they are sure to be injured by dogs. We have seen numerous devices used to protect the hedge from dogs, but all to no purpose. The better plan for such an exposed place is to plant a hedge that dogs cannot injure. They require to be spread in planting about the same distance apart as the Norway. The American Arborvitae.

The American Arborvitae.

The American arborvitae is much planted as an ornamental hedge, but it planted as an ornamental hedge, but it is not especially advisable. It should be planted about two feet apart and sheared to a point in the center. If you do not take this precaution the snow of Winter will bulge out the branches and greatly disfigure it. Never neglect the trimming of an arborvitae, for when once it has been allowed to grow so far beyond its limits that you have to shear it into the stumps to bring it back to its proper size you render it not only un-sightly for a time, but oftentimes under such treatment it dies out entirely.
