REFORMED CROOKS FIGHT GAMBLING

Go to England to Expose Tricks of Swindlers From Lecture Platform.

JOHN P. QUINN IS LEADER

Once Notorious as Smoothest American Bunco Man—Ed Noyes, Who Cheated Bank of England by Forgeries, His Lieutenant.

LONDON, Aug. 8.—(Special.)—A romance of crime is recalled by the arrival in London from America of a remarkable missionary trio. One is John P. Quinn, the erstwhile prince of sharpers and gamblers and now founder of the International Anti-Gambling Association of New York. Another is Edwin Noyes, the only living one of the four men who in 1873 committed the great forgery on the Bank of England, known as the "millions of money forgery." The third is George D. Lane, the secretary of the association mentioned.

A brisk, alert man of 72, says a London paper, Mr. Noyes little suggests the clever criminal. Thirty-five years ago, in company with Austin and George Bidwell, and George Macdonnell, he was sentenced to imprisonment for life for the crime by which bankers were defrauded of more than a hundred thousand pounds. The plans of the gang, which were almost successful, contemplated a haul of more than a million sterling.

After serving 20 years in prison Ed- win Noyes and his companions were released on ticket of leave. The brothers Bidwell died in America, George Macdonnell was killed in San Francisco and the only one left in the rest of his life he intends to devote to rescuing men from the folly of gambling, which was his ruin.

Decrying his exploits of many years ago, he says:

Noyes Tells of Exploits.
An elaborate system of forged letters of credit and bills of exchange was planned. Austin Bidwell was the "pennman" and false letters of credit were readily cashed at banks in Berlin, Dresden, Bordeaux, Marseilles and Lyons. An account was opened at the Bank of England by Bidwell in the name of F. A. Warren, and his credit was so high that he was able to draw a slight mistake in spelling the word "endorse" with a "c" in a bill drawn on Buenos Ayres led to questions, and only $50,000 instead of $1,000,000 was realized from South America. Then another tiny mistake ruined it all. A forged bill of exchange drawn on a city firm required two endorsements, only one was provided.

"I had been to the Bank of England one morning and drawn 15,000 pounds in notes and gold, and about mid-day I returned for more money. When I stepped up to the counter to my surprise I was surrounded by bank clerks and private detectives and arrested. I remained 24 times a record number—at the Mansion House before I was sentenced with the others. A plan was thought out of escape from Old Bailey. Warders were to be bribed, but there was some muddle. A hundred sovereigns intended as a bribe were upset from a bag in their haste and scattered all over the roadway."

Writes His Life Story.
To find funds for his campaign, Mr. Noyes decided to write the story of his life, including the correct statement of the essential facts of the colossal forgery on the Bank of England, and the book, entitled "One of the Four in a Million of Money" is to be published shortly. Mr. Noyes, having had his ticket of leave cancelled by H. J. Gladstone has signified his appreciation of the fact by donating the book to the present Home Secretary.

Prefer Simple Life.
If they chose these two men could probably make a big income by card sharpening, with, of course, the usual attendant risks. Instead, they prefer to travel this country and by practical and ocular demonstration at lectures arranged under the auspices of various organized bodies here, prove to the innocents the impossibility of their ever getting the better of the practiced sharp.

Every conceivable description of gambling machine, the majority having been captured from gambling halls both in the United States and on the Continent, is produced to prove the crookedness of the gambler's game, and to show that in the hands of an experienced operator the man who stakes his money cannot hope to win.

SPECIFIC FOR SUNSTROKE

cope, accompanied by intense cerebral disturbances liable to result in death. The therapeutics of the malady have long been obscure. The commonest remedies have been bleeding, cold applications, etc. The new treatment is simply chloroform given by way of inhalation or swallowed in a dilution of water. The reason for this beneficial action of chloroform in cases of sunstroke may be given in a few words. The syncope, the collapse, the fainting, which are the most serious states, are not due, as has been thought, to morbidly increased activity of the cerebral ganglia, or to any exceptional rigidity of the cardiac muscles; they are due solely to the exceptional work the heart has been called upon to do. The heat has accelerated the normal rhythm of the heart. It has overworked it. The veritable paralysis which ensues is the logical consequence of this over-exertion.

On the other hand the very fatigue of the cardiac muscles permits the circulatory system to be flooded with veritable organic poisons, which ultimately come in contact with the cellular elements of the brain, irritate them and produce, by the reflex action, a convulsive paralysis of the cerebral centers. Now, chloroform calms the movement of the heart, diminishes the excitability of the nerve ganglia and, in almost every instance, cures in a few moments.

In France, and especially in Southern France, orders have been given for its use in all emergency cases.

PROBE SAUSAGE DANGER

VEIL MAY BE LIFTED FROM LONG-CONCEALED MYSTERY.

Sensational Paper Read Before Sanitary Congress in Wales—Horses and Cats Eaten in Disguise.

LONDON, Aug. 8.—(Special.)—The "sausage danger" took up a great part of a day's session of the Sanitary Congress, just held at Cardiff. Dr. William Savage, of Colchester, read a paper on the examination of sausages and their hygienic preparation, and said that sausages, like life, were very much in the nature of a mystery. By popular tradition into them were supposed to go all manner of unlawful substances, from poor quality of meat at best to horseflesh and cats at worst. Not a few cases of food poisoning had been traced to their consumption. That more cases of disease were not ascribed to their use, was he believed, owing to the efficient cooking they generally received.

Their preparation, he urged, should be subject to supervision. They generally contained rather over 50 per cent of water, and spices and flavoring agents added tended to mask early decomposition. Hygienically, horseflesh would seem to be unobjectionable, but sausages so composed should be distinctly labeled as preservatives were frequently added, the most common being boracic acid or its compounds. In a number of cases sausage makers prepared their own sausage skins direct from slaughtered animals used them in a fresh condition—a most objectionable practice. Frequently instead of the skins taken to keep sausage skins clean, and he urged the importance of inspecting sausage-making premises to see that they were clean.

The Mayor of Cardiff protested against the use of the word "cats" in this connection, and Alderman Wilson, Newcastle, pointed out that they heard recently of an old lady of Tyneside capturing all cats in the neighborhood and selling them as Scotch hares. It was therefore not a wide stretch of imagination to connect cats being used in the preparation of sausages. The president remarked that cats had been sold in Paris as judged hares.

BUNCOES RICH DIVORCEE

Smooth-Spoken Parisian Crook Deceives Trusting Grass-Widow.

PARIS, Aug. 8.—(Special.)—For some time past a well-dressed and fairly good-looking man was able to live in great comfort, owing to a very simple device, which was to frequent the best cafes, and introduce himself to ladies as Count this or that. He selected a very aristocratic society which suited him for the moment, and latterly passed himself off as the Count de Beauregard. As such he struck up a conversation with a wealthy lady, who had recently obtained a divorce, and who took such a fancy to him that she invited him to her house. He then comforted her that she would be obliged to help him in a certain question of inheritance had been settled, and he did not dare to tell any of his friends. Of course the lady sympathized with him to the extent of several hundred dollars, and would be sympathetic with him still if she had not received an anonymous letter which opened her eyes, and informed her that the man was an impostor. She sent him about his business at once, but afterwards discovered that he had relieved her wardrobe of family jewels worth $2000. She lodged a complaint against him, and secured his arrest.

The police were not long in discovering the real name of their prisoner. He is a well-known character, who has at one time been employed in some of the fashionable restaurants, and had already been sentenced four times for theft.

TEACHES A. B. C. OF REVOLT

French Suffragette Breaks Window When Refused Ballot.

PARIS, Aug. 8.—(Special.)—A little skirmish in the women's war for the vote was fought yesterday in the Seine Correctional Court. Madame Madeleine Lepelletier, doctor of medicine, was the champion. At the municipal elections last May she presented herself at the polling station of her district and said that she came to vote. She then confessed she took a stone from her pocket and threw it through the window. To defend her conduct she came to court surrounded by a cohort of young and charming women. She said: "I broke the window because I wished to symbolize the women's agitation; to make the movement concrete." "By breaking windows?" asked the judge. "Certainly. It was the act of a teacher. I wished to teach women the A B C of revolt." "But you should address yourself to the legislators." "But we are not voters. They listen politely but without interest. They are charming but platonic." The judge cut the discussion short by fining the lady three dollars.

ABD-EL-AZIZ HAS FAITH IN EUROPE

Star of Morocco's Prodigal Sultan Is Again in the Ascendant.

MULAI HAFID WILL LOSE

Pretender Represents Fanatics and Irreconcilables, Says Lawful Ruler, and Cannot Expect to Retain Temporary Advantage.

TANGIER, Aug. 8.—(Special.)—Abd-el-Aziz's star is again in the ascendant and Mulai Hafid's power appears to be on the decline, probably owing to his extreme cruelty to the natives. Abd-el-Aziz has received another 600,000 votes to assist his march on Marrakesh. The whole of the Maghzen will accompany him. It is stated that Mulai Hafid intends to abandon Fez, and establish his court at Mequinez, as the people are dissatisfied with the enormous tributes which they are compelled to pay. The exodus of Abd-el-Aziz's harem continues, and the other day 80 women were sent off to Casa Blanca on mules. There are altogether 300 women in the harem. Only 20 will accompany the Sultan to Marrakesh. The extraordinary caravan of odalisques, all rigorously veiled, was accompanied by slaves, and escorted by a few Moroccan regulars. Most of the women have been presented to the Sultan by important kaidas, and in some cases are even the kaidas' own daughters.

On being asked for his opinion of the present state of the country, Abd-el-Aziz said that the gravity of the situation did not distress him, as he had confidence in Europe, with whose demands in the interests of civilization he had gladly complied, in face of the opposition of his people.

Pins Faith to Europe.
"Europe," he said, "has caused my ruin; Europe will sustain and save me. Europe has placed confidence in me, and I shall now place my confidence in her. I could have proclaimed the holy war at Fez after the events at Casa Blanca, or could have proclaimed my brother at Marrakesh. Then I should have had my people with me and my brother at my side.

"But I have no regrets. I was the first to become convinced of the necessity of a change in the old order of things in Morocco, and I preferred to keep my engagements with Europe, rather than to fight against her, being sure that such a course would have been ruined and captured forever.

"Mulai Hafid represents the fanatical and irreconcilable party, and if he should be recognized by Europe on condition of accepting the Algerian convention, the same party which today acclaims him would revolt against him, and another pretender would arise. He would be the leader of the fanatics who wished to have no dealings with Christians. The situation is, therefore, very clear.

Explains His Extravagance.
"I know that in Europe false opinions about me prevail. Above all, it is believed that I am anxious only to amuse myself. I know that the destruction of my property at Fez by his brother has been gaily commented upon by some newspapers, even by English ones, and I am confident that on one time the first in wishing to help me. I have been charged with having ordered hundreds of things that I did not really want, but against this I can defend myself. Once I wished to see a piano, and was told that pianos were sold by the dozen. So, instead of one, I received 12.

"I was also informed that motor-cars were bought by the dozen, and bicycles by the hundred. Once I wanted to learn photography, and the order which was given amounted to 250,000 francs for stuff for which 5000 francs would have been sufficient. Hundreds of pints of developing and fixing solutions were brought to me, which I should never have been able to use in my life, and, as the heat at Fez ruined these products, thousands and thousands of francs' worth had to be thrown away.

Pitilessly Exploited Him.
"All these legends which are in circulation about me have the same foundation. My providence, in league with faithless Ministers, exploited me pitilessly. But now, happily, it is all over. Now I am concerned only with settling the situation in Morocco. In future I shall be, like my father, always on horseback. I shall stay only two months in Marrakesh, where I shall pacify the country, but of course, the Algerian act till the country is settled, but afterward he would call a fresh conference. Fez, where Mulai Hafid is still located, is one large armed camp, and the former troops of Abd-el-Aziz are drilled daily in the interests of the new Sultan.

Mulai Hafid's Stand.
Mulai Hafid says he is "determined to know the attitude of France toward him." If she attempts to restore Abd-el-Aziz to the throne, he will call all the tribes to his support, and they will "die to the last man rather than surrender the independence of the country." Mulai Hafid prepared to abide by the Algerian act till the country is settled, but afterward he would call a fresh conference. Fez, where Mulai Hafid is still located, is one large armed camp, and the former troops of Abd-el-Aziz are drilled daily in the interests of the new Sultan.
