

NOTABLES OF THE WHOLE WORLD GO TO KARLSBAD TO TAKE THE FAMOUS WATERS

Emilie Frances Bauer Writes of Interesting Sights at Celebrated German Resort—Patti Is There, and So Is Walter Rothwell, "Madame Butterfly" Conductor.

BATREUTH, Aug. 19.—(Special Correspondence.)—As well as the name of Karlsbad is known, it is doubtful if the true life of that little spot is realized by any except those who have witnessed it for themselves. Indeed, it offers as much to the sight-seer as to the health-seeker, and for real interest there is probably no place in the world where one is more keenly alive to wondering who each individual may be. This, because so many prominent people come here every season and while on the little thoroughfares—and every alley-way is a thoroughfare—one sees the notables of the world and scores of acquaintances. During the few days which I spent in Karlsbad, through which I passed on my way to Batreuth, I saw more acquaintances than I had seen in the same length of time anywhere in Europe. Among the notables were Mrs. Patti, with her husband, the Baron Cedorstrom, and I could not help wondering whether, after her rejuvenation, she will not feel herself equal to another American tour. She is very vivacious, and her red-brown hair talks, as Mr. and Mrs. Fritz Kreisler are there, and he looks very ill and miserable. Those last few weeks in America, almost killed the great violinist, because he was suffering from "walking typhoid," and worked at least seven weeks in that condition. He told me that he has refused all early engagements for the coming season in Europe, as he must pull together and have some rest.

One of the most interesting personages in Karlsbad at present is Walter Rothwell, the well-known conductor who made several American tours with the "Parisian" and "Madame Butterfly" companies. During the visits he became so widely and so favorably known that many of the cities tried to induce him to remain in their midst. It was in America he felt that he had absolutely could not pick up the baton again before Fall. He conducted two rehearsals of "Tannhauser" and then decided that he could not possibly drag through a nine months' season without a rest. Touring all this time he was receiving cables and letters and decided in the end of June to cross the ocean again, which he did, and closed with that city for a fabulous price and the privilege of selecting an orchestra of 55 men from anywhere in the world. This talented conductor is here in Karlsbad trying to recover from the heat that he encountered in New York, but instead of resting he is making programmes and going through scores of all the modern works. He is delighted at the prospect of living in America, for which he has conceived a violent liking. The entrance to Karlsbad is deceptive if one has preconceived ideas about it, and people usually picture the dunes and the surroundings of places which they are about to visit. But all speculations as to Karlsbad must be regarded as off. The station is very unassuming and it lies very far away from the real thing. I arrived on Sunday evening, when there were several people, if such a thing were possible, than on week days. My first acquaintance was with the cafe out in Kaiserpark, where the 5 o'clock coffee is served, as also the breakfast. This is about three miles out in the woods and those who remain true to their "kur" are supposed to walk there, not ride. Everybody is enveloped in stamer rags and these are supplied by the different hotels and cafes. This extraordinary precaution is due to the fact that the waters are very weakening while the patient is taking them, and the system is run down to the lowest ebb. People suffer from the slightest turn in the weather and Karlsbad lies in the hills, consequently it is only warm for a little while during the day. The walk through the grove is delightful and one loves the sense of distance, because of the interest to be found in studying the different types of people. And types there are—from all over the world; not only different sorts of people, but different diseases are in evidence, and in time one learns the physiognomy of most of the ailments for which people come. The dressing, too, is of utmost interest, not to say amusement, because everything, from the overdressed doll to the carelessly garbed person, utterly oblivious of everything except the "kur," is to be seen. In Karlsbad food is not prepared to tempt the epicure, by any means, as everything is prepared with strict regard to ask for pepper. I think that this request established a reputation for me throughout the length, breadth—and in Karlsbad one may also talk of height—of the little village. Much of Karlsbad is built on towering heights and the one manner of getting there is by walking. The "kur" is supposed to be taken only by order of the doctors who know the waters. Of these there are many and all in different degrees of temperature and with different chemical qualities, each bearing upon the different systems to such an extent that one can easily realize the danger of indiscriminate drinking at these springs, which could as easily be the fountains of death as of life. From 5 in the morning, and earlier, people emerge from every little street and alleyway with their cup strapped around them in a most business-like way. Some of these look the image of health, but others are pitiful to gaze upon, as not only in color, but in hopelessness they are pathetic pictures. Order must be preserved, as may well be imagined, and the line, which is never broken, is frequently many hundred yards in length. At the millbrunnen colonade the water is of moderate heat and there are more who drink from this spring than from the others. The water gushes out from the stone wall around which the colonade is built, and is served by six or eight young girls with machine-like precision. From here many go across the bridge to the very hot spring, where they drink again. The water here is so hot that it boils an egg, and utmost care must be taken by those who serve it that they do not get scalded either with the water or with the steam. EMILIE FRANCES BAUER.

the early part of the season and are now occupying their dwellings themselves. Thus far the run of fish, both at Siletz Bay on the north and Alsea Bay on the south has been larger than in Yaquina Bay. Local fishermen, however, declare that the reason for this is that there are more fishermen engaged in the sport at both these places, and hence the better showing. J. D. Bost, of Portland, and party of seven are in the Bost cottage at Nye Creek awaiting the expected big run of fish. The people of Newport enjoyed a rare treat last Sunday afternoon, when a sacred concert was given at the Catholic Church, under the direction of Miss Catherine Couch, of Portland. Others on the programme beside the director were Miss Lena Harwa, soprano; Miss Rosa Friedle, contralto; Samuel Dolan, tenor; A. Glanell, tenor; James E. Bowman, baritone; Arthur A. Clifford, violinist, and Miss Frances Gallagher, pianist.
