Chic French Street Hats

Fresh from the leading designers of Paris, these hats proclaim their French origin in every line of their piquant shapes and in the wonderful new tints and materials. Each hat bears the label of a famous French milliner, and nearly every house in the Rue de la Paix is represented in this superb display. Prices.....$15 to $75

We also call attention to our superb showing of Hats at prices from $4.95 to $20.00 each.

From the very beginning of our millinery business we have made it our policy to include, at our moderate prices, copies of, or improvements upon, the very styles for which the highest prices were asked in New York. We began by demonstrating that exact copies of the models of the leading Parisian artists could be sold at the price for American millinery. And so with our own richest, most elaborate and daintiest creations. In their beauty there is nothing to surpass them—and the prices are but HALF the prices of millinery of equal character elsewhere. We present our showing of hats, priced from $5 to $20, as a magnificent demonstration of just what Lipman-Wolfe Millinery has become through careful hunting for millinery talent and a businesslike handling of its production. We prove to several hundred people a day at this season that this is the best place in Portland to find a pretty hat, and the least expensive place in Portland in which really pretty hats are sold.

NEW ERRANDS MARKED

Young Turk Party Is Accomplishing Wonders.

FREEMASONRY IS ITS BASIS

Committee Which Has Brought About Such Radical Changes Has No Organization of Any Kind.

SALONICA, Sept. 5.—(Special.)—It is now possible to describe the methods and aims of the Young Turk party, which has achieved so complete and astonishing a success. Not the least curious feature of the story is the secrecy of the organization and the suddenness of the final developments. Macedonia is studied with observant pairs of European eyes belonging to gendarmic officers, Consuls and Vice-Consuls, whose vigilance is rarely relaxed, yet there is no one who does not confess himself surprised by what has taken place. The East has kept its own secret, according to its immemorial custom. Bewildered skepticism was now given way to general satisfaction at the present idyllic condition of affairs and to a solid, though not fully assured, hope for the future.

The new phase of the Young Turk movement, which has culminated in a successful rising in European Turkey, began three years ago with the formation of a secret committee of liberty. A Young Turkish organization had long existed, but its members were chiefly exiles and its center was Paris. Murad Bey, its former leader, was unfortunately not proof against the blandishments of Yildiz Kiosk. He deserted the cause and, betraying his agents, returned to Constantinople. The committee, however, has now had the effrontery to telegraph to the Young Turk committee a declaration that he had always struggled in their behalf.

Hampered by Spies.

Others were more stout-hearted, and Ahmed Riza Bey and his friends continued to labor at Paris to promote a liberal propaganda in Turkey, but the ramifications of the system of espionage made the difficulties of the task insurmountable for an outside organization. The committee of liberty was formed in Turkey itself and its most active center was Salonica. On hearing of its formation the Young Turks of Paris sent an emissary with a proposal that, in order to promote common action, it should adopt the title of the Paris organization, the Ottoman Committee of Union and Progress, and should appoint the members of the Paris committee its delegates. This proposal was adopted and Ahmed Riza Bey and his colleagues have been the trusted agents abroad of the association in Turkey since that time.

The new organization consisted chiefly of servants of the government, civil and military, with a goodly proportion of young officers. The nature of the force which produced it is now evident. The old discontent with the misgovernment and oppression of the country never resulted in any effective movement for reform. The European reform schemes have laid the train and kindled the spark and the powers, with quite another intent, have indirectly caused this amazing revolutionary movement.

Notified by Europeans.

To the Turks the advent of the European officers and the imposition of reforms have been unpeppering modifications and have engendered the bitterest hatred of the corrupt regime at Yildiz Kiosk, which, by its impotence, tyrannical and provocative attitude towards the rayah, exposed the empire to continual humiliations. The impotence of the government was demonstrated in a striking object-lesson by the fact that the foreign officers, although their authority was cut down to the lowest point and their activities hampered at every turn, succeeded in turning the gendarmic into a smart-well-dressed and well-drilled force, while the powers insisted that it should be regularly paid.

The contrast between the condition of the gendarmic under foreign surveillance and the condition of the army, at the mercy of their own corrupt and inefficient rulers, was a bitter one for officers and men. The plunder of the empire by European concession-hunters and a long series of ignominious incidents increased the hatred of the palace. And there appears to have been also in Macedonia a prevalent conviction among the Turks that the attitude of the palace towards the Macedonian question, its encouragement of the bands, and stubborn opposition to reform, would inevitably end in the loss of the whole of European Turkey.

Freemasonry Is Basis.

The Salonica committee set vigorously to work. It saw that the only way to bring a constitution from the Sultan was by force, and conceived the plan of a general strike of the troops on some critical occasion. The Third Army Corps, stationed at Macedonia, was made the special object of its attentions and the new propaganda infected the officers with extraordinary speed. Local committees were formed everywhere, no unit of the army being neglected. The finer details of organization must be still withheld from the public, but its basis is Freemasonry, which in the past three years has grown prodigiously in Turkey. The Salonica Freemasons, whose very existence was hitherto a profound secret, were photographed with their orders and decorations on Constitution day.

The committee has no officials of any kind, either at Salonica or elsewhere. A chairman is elected to preside over each sitting, but he has no further authority, and meetings are summoned by the members in general by word of mouth. They have now, however, a recognized rendezvous, where business is transacted and the members are ordinarily to be found. At Salonica the Sultan has presented the White Tower Garden and building to the committee for its use as a club and by thus mentioning it in an article, has transformed it from an informal body without legal existence into a legal entity which the state is cognizant.

Had Help From Paris.

A great deal of help in the work of organization came from the Paris committee, but it is not clear how far financial assistance was rendered from outside. The whole work was done with singularly little expense, as the emissaries in general worked for "love," while officers and officials all contributed their mittee, whenever money came their way. The feudal boys of Macedonia are also for the most part ardent supporters of the Young Turks and a good harvest brought some gold to the committee's treasury. But, naturally, the committee did not neglect the other parts of the empire in their propaganda.

The Second Army Corps, at Adrianople, was inoculated with the virus, and special attention was also paid to Asia Minor. Thus, nearly proved successful, a series of raids and perquisitions were made and a commission was sent from Constantinople to collect evidence against suspected persons, but so widespread had the propaganda now become among officials and officers that it continued unchecked.

Additional efforts were made to disrupt the common front by means of bribery, which nearly proved successful, and it was then resolved to act, and to act quickly. Consequently the constitution was proclaimed by a small force in the Beana Hills in the name of the Ottoman Committee of Union and Progress.

SOLDIERS RAID THEATER

AVENGE INSULT FROM USHERS IN CHINESE PLAYHOUSE.

Ill-Feeling Between Military Men and Civilians in Soochow Results in Free Fight.

SHANGHAI, Sept. 5.—(Special.)—The Shanghai Times prints a lively story from Soochow. It appears that soldiers and civilians in that district are on indifferent terms, and when four soldiers, carrying pet birds, entered a theater recently to see the play, and were asked to cover the cages so that disturbance might not arise, they not only regarded the attendant with a frigid stare, but assaulted him for his impertinence in making the suggestion. The servants of the theater gathered in a body, beating the soldiers in turn, and handing over two to the police. The two who were handed over were taken to the stamp for punishment, but they seem to have aroused instead the sympathy of their comrades, and a hundred soldiers determined to raid the theater on the morrow, and with their lives. Unfortunately, the soldiers' their designs became known, and 300 unemployed but eager men rose up on the instant to defend the theater with their lives. Unfortunately, the soldiers did not come on the instant and the valor of the voluntary army oozed away, till at length the last man had gone—probably inside—and when soldiers arrived they carried the box-office by storm. Having obtained entrance to the building, they set about belaboring the spectators with long sticks, as a consequence of which action the show broke up rather suddenly, but no one was seriously hurt. After matters had quieted down, the Chinese officials approached the scene, and made inquiry for the officer of the camp, who, it turned out, had just run away. In his absence, they beat the soldiers, and left them with arrows stuck in the backs of their ears.

WOMEN AMONG BRITISH NOBILITY TO HAVE YACHT-SAILING FAD

DUCHESS OF WESTMINSTER, WHO WON MUCH ADMIRATION BY SAILING HER OWN YACHT DURING "COWES WEEK."

LONDON, Sept. 5.—(Special.)—"Cowes week" is responsible for a new fad, which was started during the visit of royalty by the Duchess of Westminster. She was the only woman who sailed her own yacht, and the enthusiasm with which her feats of seamanship were received by the yachtsmen assembled there resulted in many a resolve on the part of other women of the smart set to acquire somewhat of her skill in the handling of a yacht.

The Duchess sailed her speedy yacht Sorata entirely without the Duke's assistance. Her handling of the trim craft excited general admiration and even royalty joined in praise of her cleverness. The fad which she has started for English and continental ports is likely to extend to the other side of the Atlantic, so that fair leaders of the Newport set may soon be seen trying their skill in handling the luxurious big yachts of the American millionaires.

At the request of the telegraph adviser of the Board of Posts and Communications, Cheng Pi, the president of the board, will establish a factory in Tientsin for the manufacture of all the material which is likely to be required for extensions of the telegraph system which are projected, and which, depending on internationalization schemes, will involve, it is expected that the new lines and extensions which are contemplated will involve 10,000 miles.

Germany Adopts Turbines.

BERLIN, Sept. 5.—(Special.)—The German Navy Department has decided to install a great plant for the manufacture of the turbine engines with which a large number of German warships are being equipped. Parsons' turbines were formerly used exclusively on German cruisers, but they are being steadily supplanted by those turned out by German firms. Eight of the torpedo-boats will be fitted with German turbines. Turbines have heretofore been used only experimentally in German torpedo-boats.

Delegates Represent Extremists in Revolutionary Party—Spies Faithfully Report All Proceedings.

LONDON, Sept. 5.—(Special.)—Nihilists abound in London, at present, for these members of the Char have come here from all parts of the world to attend a secret conference in this city to decide upon what is to be done in Russia. The men and women, for there are many women here, have been drawn from the most extreme members of the Russian Revolutionary party.

"Many of them have come here," said a Secret Service man who is one of the greatest authorities on anarchists and their doings, to me last night, "with ordinary passports, and some of them have come with none, but it is certain that the Russian government knows all about them and in spite of all their precautions every word which is uttered, nothing is written, and nothing is reported to the Russian police by means of the spies who obtain admission as members. You can be sure that the 80 members there are about ten informers."

"There is no doubt that this congress is a revolutionary parliament of a very advanced type for the discussion of Russian politics and quite different from the Social Democratic Congress of last year, although some persons have been in both assemblies."

CONSPIRATOR SAYS MONARCH ORGANIZED BOMB PLOT.

Object Aggrandizement of Serbia by Utter Extinction of Montenegrin Dynasty.

BERLIN, Sept. 5.—(Special.)—An amazing confession of a conspirator has just been published at Budapest. It contains details of a widespread Southern Slav conspiracy for the aggrandizement of Serbia, and the most direct accusations against King Peter of being the organizer of the bomb plot for the extinction of the Montenegrin dynasty. The volume is entitled "Finale," and the author is George Nasitch, the young revolutionary whose revelations at the trial in Cetinje of those concerned in the plot against Prince Nicholas brought the proceedings to a close and caused the sentence to be passed on most of the 30 prisoners. Nasitch declares himself appalled by the conspirators' aim and he says he must free his conscience even at the peril of his life.

He declares that the aim of the conspiracy is to incorporate Montenegro and the Slav provinces of Austria-Hungary under the Serbian power. Slav officers and men in the Austrian army have been won over and the work is steadily proceeding, directed, Nasitch declares, by King Peter and his son and the dignitaries of the Serbian court.

He gives a list of the heads of the revolutionary organization and a draft of the statute of same. The names included those of the president of the Serbian Parliament, of Captain Nenadovitch, a near relative of the late King Peter, and of a score of well-known men in Serbia, merchants, army officers and civil servants. Among them is the director of the Serbian state ammunition factory at Kragjevez, who made the bombs destined to kill the Prince of Montenegro. The Serbian Crown Prince, according to Nasitch, supervised the manufacture of the bombs and gave $100,000 towards the cost. The support given to the conspirators by the Serbian foreign office is not denied. All their expenses were defrayed from state funds.

"And the inspirer of the whole movement," says Nasitch, "my readers will guess who this abandoned wretch is, and the whole world will be aware that it is the same criminal who assassinated King Alexander and Queen Draga, thereby branding the forehead of the Serbian nation forever with a brand of shame."
