

Veiling Shows New Styles of Beauty in Shades and Materials

PARISIAN NOVELTIES, NOW COMING IN FOR FASHIONABLE WEAR, HAVE AN IRRESISTIBLE CHARM.

ONE might think that it would be well nigh impossible to evolve anything new in veils, after so many generations of well wearing and the infinite variety of plain and fancy face and hat drapes that the changing fashions of the past decade have shown. Yet a look in at the display window of any of the up-to-date shops, where the new millinery and veiling stock is being exhibited, is sufficient to convince one that the limit of variety has not yet been reached—also that the Parisian novelty veils just now coming in for wear with the latest fall millinery, are not only new, but quite the most irresistible ever contrived for the depiction of one's bank account.

One of the distinguishing features about the new long veils is the double mesh, in two colors, the soft silken tones of the two separate meshes blending with charming effect. Some six or seven seasons ago there was a similar fashion in veils, the smart thing then being a combination of double veils, usually of green over white; but the veils were adjusted separately, instead of being in one piece, as are the Parisian novelties now being offered.

One of these new double veils is shown in the accompanying illustration, No. 3, the color tones being soft greenish gray over black, with a silken border of black, joining the two meshes at the edge. This veil, and the others shown here, represent only a few of the almost infinite variety of meshes and color tones in the extensive stock of one of the big local department stores.

Picture No. 3 also shows one of the new fashions of draping the latest thing in motor or traveling veils. It is square in shape, instead of long and narrow. The huge square is placed so that its center strikes the center of the hat crown, with one of the corners falling down over the forehead, the other three corners are brought around from behind and tied in the front, the single loose corner being left for a face protection, with the corner tucked in at the chin when the face is to be covered, or thrown back over the hat, as shown in the illustration, when one does not wish it over the face.

Another feature of the new veils and the fashion in which they are to be worn, is shown in No. 2. One of the novel long veils being worn over a face veil of the new Russian net, or hexagon weave. This is heralded as the very smartest thing in face veils, being a mesh of six-cornered openings, with large square or round dots. The striking border, of black and white faintly checkered silk, shown on this long white veil, is another smart item of the new styles. The long veils are intended to be tied in a huge fluffy bow under the left ear, or may be worn as shown in the illustration.

Another veil of extreme length, and the manner of tying it is shown in No. 4. This veil is in the daintiest of lavender tints, and the finest of silken meshes, with a woven border in the same tint, but of closer weave. The face veil worn with this long veil is one of the new Tuxedo weaves, with closely placed dots, very dainty and becoming to any type of femininity.

One of the more elaborate face veils, is intended to be used as a drape as well, is shown in No. 1. This comes in black, brown and the darker tones, in a variety of novelty nets and meshes, and has a heavily embroidered floral border at its more than an inch from the edge. This style of veil is worn loose about the face, and falling loosely at the back, from the edge of the hat, instead of being secured at the nape of the neck, as the recent fashion has been.

No. 5 shows, in more detail, the new hexagon veil and the square block that will be largely used instead of the round dots. Some of the new styles impossible to show through photographs, are exquisitely fine in weave, and particularly dainty, with velvet and chenille dots. One of these is the half mesh, a veritable web of daintiness, yet strong enough, through the thickly placed dots, to wear well.

A pretty wedding was celebrated Tuesday evening, September 8, at the home of Mrs. L. Young, Glenwood, when her only daughter, Miss Emma A. Young, was united in marriage to Louis A. Young.

Bougher, Archdeacon H. D. Chambers officiating.

At 1:30 o'clock Mrs. Covert sang "O Promise Me," and then played the Lohengrin wedding march to the strains of which the bridal party descended the stairs and entered the parlor, which was beautifully decorated in Autumn leaves and evergreens. Entering with her brother, Arthur, the bride looked charming in a gown of sheer silk mull, and princess lace, combined with liberty silk, made princess. She wore a diamond brooch carried by her roses. The bridesmaids were her sister, Miss Nellie, in a silk organdie trimmed prettily with lace, carrying sweetpeas, and Miss Tillie Koch, who wore a princess, Hungarian gown elaborately trimmed in baby Irish and valenciennes lace and carried white asters. Dave White acted as best man.

After the ceremony and congratulations Miss Bertha Otterstead favored the guests with a recitation entitled "Women's Rights," after which luncheon was served to the bride and groom's many friends.
