TEACHERS CRY FOR WORK

Supply in England Greatly Exceeds Present Demand.

LONDON, Oct. 10.—(Special.)—A glut in the teacher market in England is the latest labor phenomenon. Hundreds of teachers who left the training colleges in June are still without employment. Two causes are assigned for this—first, high education rates, which have led local education authorities to think about economizing on the teaching staff, and, secondly, the enormously increased facilities for the training of teachers which have come into existence since the Education Act of 1902 was passed. Immediately rate-aid was given to the voluntary schools—which previously had only been able to afford short staffs—a big demand for teachers arose, and there was really a dearth. The dearth has now been overtaken, and the cry of the unemployed teacher is beginning to be heard. Perhaps this is the real reason behind a remarkable resolution which has just been passed by the executive of the National Union of Teachers. They demand that the granting of special scholarships to those who desire to be teachers, as well as grants to training colleges, shall be stopped, and that a teacher shall pay for his or her own training.

The population of Dublin, Ireland, in 1907 was 447,266, the population of Belfast at the same time, 248,965.
