BY WALTER IRWIN, M. O.
(Written for The Times Magazine.)

In many cases a more ruddy color is noticeable on the right side of the face, the right eye is shorter, its pupil narrower; in short everything points to a better blood supply on the right side of the brain, which consequently imparts to the left side of the body advantages over the right, a condition styled "left-handedness."

It is usually observed that these people sleep on their left side as the average right-handed person will rest more comfortably on the right side, in the unconscious endeavor to relieve the side of the brain which is more highly charged with blood.

PRINCIPLES APPLY EQUALLY TO EYES.

That these conditions which apply to the hands should apply to the eyes is not strange and the careless way in which glasses of exactly the same character are prescribed for eyes that are totally different in their nature, is the unconscious cause of many nerve troubles among eye workers. It does not follow that the focusing of lenses to the sight of each eye will mean their working in harmonious unison, as these very facts may upset a life-long habit of viewing objects through differently focused eyes, or produce an unequal strain on ocular muscles which rotate the eye and have little or no direct bearing upon the sight.

Thus it should be seen that an accurate knowledge of physical conditions should be one of the requirements of all specialists who assume the treatment of eye troubles or even the fitting of glasses.

One frequently looks back to the time when doctors and dentists of questionable responsibility spread misery about the country, and wonders at the extreme ignorance or carelessness of persons trusting their teeth or their lives to hands so untrustworthy. However, a very similar thing is done today by persons buying spectacles from street vendors or having their eyes fitted by opticians entirely unqualified and often not possessing the fundamental principles of the eye's construction.

If the number of persons who obtain glasses from such unreliable sources were known, it would be certain to cause considerable surprise. A pair costing 50 cents seems to them as good as any they would pay $5 for, made on a specialist's prescription. Glasses acquired in various ways, by inheritance or friendly exchange, and even glasses found on the streets, are often used to the great detriment of the wearer's eyes and are frequently the cause of permanent injury.
