

VALUABLE DOGS ARE STOLEN

Portland fanciers think thieves sell in other cities.

BY WILL G. MAC RAE.

Is there an organized band of dog thieves operating in Portland? This is a question that many dog fanciers have been asking themselves, but there has been no answer to the query. If there is such a gang, and there is every reason to believe that an organized band has been in operation in Portland for years without molestation from either the police or the Portland Kennel Club, some of the local fanciers think it is time some action be taken. A man's dog, under the laws of Oregon, is personal property, and it is just as much of a crime to steal a dog as it is to commit larceny of any kind.

The opening of the shooting season is the time that the dog thief gets into action, and during the past year or two several valuable dogs have been stolen. No arrests have been made, and so far as is known the owner has never been assisted in recovering his dog, either by the police or the Kennel Club. It has reached a point now that the owner of a valuable hunting dog cannot allow the animal out of his sight for a minute. If he does, some thief who has spotted the dog and knows that he is a good one, has added to the already long list that has been stolen.

Sold in Other Towns.

The dog thief is a master hand at his business. He does not steal a good dog and then try to sell him in town. His method is to get the dog out of town to sell him out of town to some other thief, and then he is sold. The same thing is done by the dog thief in some other town. Here in the city a man is made up a month before the shooting season opens and keeps up his work as long as the season lasts and there is a market for dogs. Here in the city a man of dogs were stolen before the season opened and hardly a day has passed since that the advertising columns of the Oregonian do not contain an advertisement of a lost hunting dog.

Sometimes when the owner has made an unusual effort to recover his property and it has been published that the dog is watching the express office, the owner gets his dog back through his advertisement, but it is only about one dog in ten that is recovered after it has been stolen.

This year alone over 50 high-class field dogs have been stolen and only in one of two instances have they been recovered. Dr. Alan Welch Smith was one of the fortunates.

His prize-winner, Handsome Dan, was stolen and he found the dog himself after many days of searching. Dr. Smith had every reason to believe the people who had his dog had stolen him, but they claimed that he came to them. Max McDonald, who lost his English setter, Dan, was not so fortunate. The dog was stolen two weeks before the shooting season opened and in spite of the reward offered, Dan has never been returned. Dr. John H. Montgomery is the latest victim. A week ago his fine field dog, Dan, disappeared and Dr. Montgomery has secured the town for the dog with no success. Dr. Montgomery is loth to believe that some one was waiting for a chance to steal Dan and for that reason, he is willing, if he can get back his dog, to ask no questions. Dan is a fine field dog and Dr. Montgomery is all broken up over his disappearance, especially so now because his pointer dog was run over and killed the other day by an automobile. Dr. Montgomery's dog, like Mr. Fleischner's bird, is an English setter with black ears and a dobby thickly ticked with black spots. He has a double claw on the right hind foot and has tan markings around the mouth and eyes.

Kennel Club Should Help.

Just one arrest and conviction would undoubtedly put a stop to the wholesale stealing of dogs that has been going on so long. The Kennel Club, while of course the main reason of its organization is to hold bench shows, should take a hand in the matter. Its members are made up of dog fanciers and they would help a great deal by sending out notices to other kennel clubs when a valuable dog has been stolen.

The postal card system, with a picture and description of the dog, could be sent out through the mails, not only to the various kennel clubs, but to the local authorities as well. This could be done without great cost and it would show that the club was anxious to help the owner recover his dog. It wouldn't even be a bad matter for the club to offer a reward for the arrest and conviction of dog thieves, or information leading up to the arrest and conviction of men who are in the business of stealing dogs.

SELECT TAFT TO PRESIDE

Will Address Joint Conference in Washington.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 23.—President-elect William H. Taft has accepted an invitation to preside over and address a joint conference of the National Conservation Commission with the Governors of the states in this city, December 8, an event which will bring together an assemblage of the nation's leading men in commercial, financial and political activity, and whose importance may be expected to rival the noted White House conference held by President Roosevelt last May.

The joint conference will be in progress four days, and will be fraught with wonderful possibilities toward shaping an epoch in the country's commercial advance. In fact, it is the first conference wherein tangible data as to the scope of the natural resources in the United States will be presented by the commission, and a practical plan mapped out whereby conservation may be accomplished.

President Roosevelt will deliver an address the opening day. J. J. Hill, John Mitchell, Andrew Carnegie and a score of others have invitations to be present.

Since the conference several months ago, when the President quickened the interest of the entire Nation in one of its most perplexing problems, the National Conservation Commission has made an inventory of the natural resources of the country. This inventory, which embraces waters, minerals, forests and lands, will be presented by Clifford Pinchot, chairman of the commission, who, in his report to the President January 1, will make recommendations as to the work which the commission and the joint conference may suggest as vital in solving the conservation problem.
