CRISIS IN INDIA SEEMS IMPENDING

England's Unchanging Policy Wears Out Patience of Native Citizens.

PREACH HOSTILE DOCTRINE

Liberality of Government Has Permitted Free Publication and Discussion of Heresies That Forma
Opinions Against Nation.

SIMLA, India, Dec. 5.—(Special.)—A crisis seems to be impending in India. The key to the true causes of the present situation will be found in England's steady and unvarying general policy towards India. The form and final aim of the British administration of this country has long been settled in accordance with the intentions of England, and has remained astonishingly unchanged during the last 60 years.

Has Secured Property.

The envy of the foreigner, the malice of the renegade of her own house has been equally silent before the manner of England's performance of her great stewardship. England has made life and property secure; has administered equal justice; has spread the benefits of education far and wide; has allowed freedom of speech and freedom of the press; has respected religion and religious prejudice with care; has upheld a standard of scrupulous purity and honesty in public affairs; has thrown open to the utmost possible extent the service of India to the Indians; has run the road and bridged the river, and above all, perhaps, has made men of millions of down-trodden slaves. England has caused the native of India to respect himself. From that standard no official has derogated without detection and dismissal; to that standard it would be hard for a congress of philosophers to add. The individual has counted for less in India during the past half century than anywhere else in the world. And now the great and splendid engine runs of itself, and to the last day of British occupation of India will continue to carry out the functions with which the English have entrusted it.

Liberality the Cause.

How comes it, many will say, that with an administration framed upon such excellent lines, there is the opportunity for even malevolent criticism to obtain such publicity in the peninsula? The very liberality with which England has permitted the free publication and discussion of political heresies has encouraged a thousand to preach disobedience where, under a sterner code, even one might have hesitated to betray his secret opinions. The truest commentary upon the British policy in India was written 100 years ago by the Abbe Dubois. His final estimate of the necessary relations between the English and the Indian is: "Under the supremacy of the Brahmins the people of India hated their government, while they cherished and respected their rulers; under the supremacy of Europeans they hate and despise their rulers from the bottom of their hearts, while they cherish and respect their government." It is to predict that the British will attempt in vain to effect any very considerable changes in the social condition of the people of India. To make a people happy it is essential that they themselves should desire to be made happy, and should cooperate with those who are working for their happiness. The people of India, it appears, neither possess this desire nor are anxious to co-operate to this end. Every reform which is obstinately pushed aside, if it is likely in the least degree to disturb their manner of living, their most absurd prejudice or their most perille custom.

Need of Strong Men.

This is as true today as it was a hundred years ago, and the English need not look far for the causes of unrest that exist in India.

If there were in India today men like the Abbe it is possible that neither cause of friction might sometimes be avoided. But it is to be remembered that the main reason why the present and recent generations have lost that close touch with the men which characterized many Englishmen in the days of the East India Company is that those old irregular liaisons, which were the source of much of that intimate knowledge, have totally disappeared today. But, however frequently knowledge, gained directly or indirectly by such means, might have saved individuals from blunders, it would be a mistake to suppose that the deep, underlying movement of the people of India would have been really influenced. England is dealing with far wider issues, and with far deeper traits of human nature, and her first task is to estimate the volume and direction of the moving tide; the day for the interference of Mrs. Partington in Indian politics is over. So much seems to be understood, both by Lord Morley and by the government of India.

The Anglo-Indian official is often a sound judge of his own district only. A civilian permanently employed in Rajputana would have views about the present unrest which would barely be regarded as those of a rational being by a police official in Poona. In the mass of evidence and in a certain detachedness of standpoint lies safety at the present moment, but it must not be forgotten that the Brahmins of India have ambitions which no foreigner can fathom.

Boom Pan Slavism by Bal.

BERLIN, Dec. 5.—(Special.)—It is reported from St. Petersburg that representatives of the Douma and the Council of the Empire intend to organize a grandiose Slavonic ball, to be held in the Taurida Palace next February. Invitations will be issued to prominent Slavs throughout Europe. The palace will be tastefully decorated in the Slav style, and the ladies' dresses will be modeled on one of the various picturesque costumes of the Slav peoples. It is stated that the Speaker of the Douma and the Princes Trubetskaya are among the members of the organizing committee.
