GREEKS WRONGED BY BULGARIANS

Will Ask Balkan Conference to Exact Compensation for Losses.

DRIVEN FROM THEIR HOMES

Refugees From Eastern Roumelia
Deprived of Property and Liberty Become Burden on Greece.
Which Asks Redress.

ATHENS, Dec. 25.—(Special.)—The unanimous feeling of influential Greek politicians is that the terms arranged at the Balkan conference should not be restricted to the recent action of Austria and Bulgaria. The Bulgarian violations of the treaty of Berlin have inflicted grievous hardship on many thousands of peaceable citizens, whose liberties and rights were expressly safeguarded by the treaty. Article 3 provides that:

Religious Liberty Guaranteed.

"Religious differences can be alleged against no one as a motive for exclusion or incapacity as regards the enjoyment of civil and political rights. Liberty of religion and of worship is assured in all creeds to all the Bulgarian subjects, as well as to foreigners, and no restriction can be applied either to the organization of the hierarchy of the different communions or to their relations with their spiritual heads."

Five years later, when the statutes of Eastern Roumelia were drawn up by the representatives of the great powers at Constantinople, these provisions were expressly confirmed and added to: "No religious community can be forced to introduce into its schools any language other than its own." Yet, regardless of the laws of nations, the Bulgarians have, within the last three years, rendered the lot of the Greeks inhabiting the principality virtually unbearable. Colonies of Greeks have been settled in Eastern Roumelia for many centuries. The cities of Philippopolis, Stanimak and Varna were their center and their spiritual needs were watched over by bishops nominated by the Patriarch of Constantinople as separate from the bishops of the Bulgarian Church, who are nominated by the Bulgarian Emperor. This condition of affairs was expressly guaranteed under the terms of the treaty of Berlin.

Driven Out by Bulgarians.

When the Macedonian troubles broke out in 1902, the sympathies of the Greeks in Eastern Roumelia naturally went out to their brethren in Turkey. This sympathy, however, was not limited to subscriptions and meetings were held in all Greek villages. The Bulgarian Macedonian committees took umbrage and induced the government to put in force laws passed with regard to public instruction in 1891, and hitherto never made applicable to Greece, which forbade the existence of Greek primary schools, compelled the Greeks to send their children to Bulgarian schools, and appropriated all educational and church buildings, which were the property of the Greek communities. These Greek colonies date back to the seventh century before the Christian era, the colonists were among the earliest converts to Christianity, the churches and schools had been in existence for centuries before the Turkish conquest and the Bulgarians themselves owe their conversion to Christianity to the Greek missionaries.

Not content with the confiscation of the church property, the Bulgarians forbade the return of the Greek bishops, and when the Greeks endeavored to prevent the forcible occupation of their properties by the mob, the Macedonian committees destroyed not merely the churches and schools, but all the Greek property. Grounds were rendered homeless and were compelled to seek refuge in Greece.

Greece Shelters Refugees.

Greek ships were dispatched from the Piræus to fetch the refugees, some 47,000 of whom are now beholden to the charity of the Greek nation for their daily bread. Anchialos, a town on the shore of the Black Sea, which was burnt and pillaged by the Bulgars in August, 1906, has been replaced by Anchialos on the shores of the Gulf of Volo. Here 300 houses have been built by the Greek government, each standing in its little plot of 100 square yards of garden, while 30,000 acres have been placed at the disposal of the inhabitants for cultivation. Ten miles to the south a similar town bearing the name New Philippopolis has sprung up with upwards of 100 houses, built much on the same lines, and the villagers have commenced to reap a good harvest in tobacco. In the neighborhood of Larissa a third town has been built, while at fourth and yet a fifth are in course of construction in the southern districts of Thessaly.

Should Make Bulgaria Pay.

But Greece is a poor kingdom, and to take in her midst 47,000 penniless refugees has been a severe financial burden. No less than 150,000 acres of land has been purchased by the Greek government and placed on easy terms at the disposal of the refugees. They are advanced money for the purchase of farming implements and cattle, their houses are being built and are to be paid for by annual installments, and for two years pending the construction of these villages the refugees have been supported by the state and by subscriptions. The refugees have cost the Greek government at least 45,000,000, while the value of the properties confiscated by the Bulgarian government or by private individuals cannot be much less.

Here is a clear case of another flagrant violation of the treaty of Berlin. If Bulgaria is adjudged liable to pay an indemnity to Turkey for the annexation of Eastern Roumelia, surely she should be compelled to restore to the subjects she has expelled in violation of the treaty of Berlin the value of the land and buildings she has illegally seized.
