Abuse Franking

The franking privilege has been crit-icised freely ever since it came into use. It is often the came that ques-tionable use of it by members of Con-gress has aroused fresh opposition. It is startling, at least, to find an outlay for free transmission through the United States mails aggregating amount equal to more than one-fifth of the total expenditures of the Post-office Department. It might be a good

The report on franked mail is ac-companied by a statement of outlay of $57,000,000 for uncompensated service in the handling and transporting of second-class matter of publishers of newspapers and periodicals. The rate on such matter is low, because it is counted of distinct value to the people. The same thing is true of tons of mail sent out from Washington. The distribution through the Department of Agriculture, for example, must be heavy But the educational value to the country at large of the reports and documents given wide circulation is undoubted.

larger part of the outlays, considered from the standpoint of the diffusion of Rnowledge among the people, would be regarded as desirable.—Chicago Tribune.
