BETTER BUY A MAJESTIC Than Wish You Had

There is many a woman who buys some other range because it costs a little less than a MAJESTIC. It looks about as good as a MAJESTIC, and for a time—say, a year or two—it gives pretty good satisfaction. Then the joints expand, the oven won't hold heat as it did, it takes twice the fuel to do the same amount of cooking, and you find the few dollars you saved on the start were mighty poor economy.

Don't make that mistake; come in and let us demonstrate the many points of MAJESTIC construction, and the exclusive labor-saving features possessed by this range. When you consider a MAJESTIC lasts a lifetime and uses less fuel than any range made, it will prove much the cheapest in the long run. Priced from $37.50 to $75.00—and worth double what they cost.

EARTHQUAKE FUNDS NEARLY EXHAUSTED

Much Suffering Still Remains to Be Alleviated in Reggio, Messina and Elsewhere.

FOOD AND SHELTER NEEDED

While Relief Work Has Been All That Could Be Expected, Magnitude of Disaster Drains Charitable Societies' Resources.

ROME, March 20.—(Special.)—Lamentable conditions still prevail in the devastated districts of Messina and Reggio. Nearly three months have passed since the earthquake laid low these towns and innumerable villages in Sicily and Calabria, leaving behind it a death toll which cannot yet be computed, and a desolation unequalled in modern times. The appalling magnitude and suddenness of the catastrophe might well have stunned any country and excused many shortcomings in the work of relief, even though they also stirred the pity of the whole world and inspired eager offers of assistance from every quarter of the globe. But three months have now gone by, a period long enough to have relieved all immediate distress and to have made good start in the work of reparation, and still but little has actually been effected in comparison with what might have been done. The principal relief committee in Rome, composed of men of the highest character and integrity, has simply failed to rise to the emergency with which it has been called upon to deal. The truth is that the members of this committee appear to be overwhelmed by the magnitude of their task.

The immediate necessity is for the conveyance of food and clothing to the localities, many of them comparatively inaccessible, in which they are urgently required, and for the erection of temporary shelters where buildings have been destroyed. The inaction of the Central Committee is the less excusable, as the various local and foreign relief committees appear to have shown their excellent examples, but so large a portion of the total sum contributed was sent to the central fund, and is still awaiting the decisions of those by whom it is controlled, that many of these local committees are at the end of their resources and are compelled to remain helpless spectators of misery which they are no longer able to alleviate.

Civil Rule Falls.

The military rule in Messina and Reggio has given place to civil administration, not altogether with advantage. The erection of wooden houses proceeds only slowly, with indefinite delays, and until adequate shelter can be provided in the stricken regions there is no way of bringing back the scattered refugees to their own provinces. Until these fugitives return there is still terrible need of supporting them elsewhere, and little prospect of permanent alleviation of their misery. On the other hand, it must be acknowledged that there are many difficulties, not fully appreciated, perhaps, abroad, which help to explain, though they do not altogether excuse, the shortcomings of the work of relief.

Of the total of the sums collected in Italy, and all over the world, for immediate and unofficial relief, no exact amount can be given. The Vatican fund has reached over $800,000; the Lombard and Piedmontese funds have possibly reached about $700,000; the American and English funds were for some time paid into that of the Central Committee or National fund—over and above the money thus paid, they have realized some $2,000,000, chiefly American, and expended in stores and portable houses; the National fund, at the disposal of the Central Committee, stands at $1,200,000, of which the American contribution must have amounted to about $2,500,000.

Funds Well Expended.

In addition, there is the society for the protection of the orphans, which has received from various sources $200,000, and other less important charitable enterprises. The Vatican fund has been spent through the agency of the Church with great discretion and very impartial liberality, some proportion of it being reserved for the restoration of ruined churches in various parishes. The Piedmontese and Lombard committees have administered their own funds admirably, with much practical common sense. Of the British and American organizations a full account has been given. The administration of these funds deserve nothing but praise.

The same, however, cannot be said for the administration of the Central fund, which represents the great bulk of the money subscribed, both in Italy and abroad. An excellent committee was selected for its distribution, but from the first this committee seems to have entirely misconceived the part they were asked to play. The money was for immediate relief and to prevent unnecessary suffering; they have chosen to regard it as a sacred trust for the future, as well as the present needs of the victims. Two months after the disaster they had spent only a tenth of the sum in their keeping, and permanent benefit. In the way of immediate relief they doled out totally insufficient sums.

Behind Reggio and Messina, stretching far away on either coast, lies a once populous region, now a waste surrounding some 60 ruined towns and countless villages, whose wretched inhabitants are, many of them, still naked and starving.

TAX BILL LEADS TO RIOT

Spaniards End Discussion of Measure With Stabbing Affray.

LISBON, March 20.—(Special.)—The proposed tax on agriculture has led to a conflict in the Spanish town of Montecigar. A public meeting was convened, and angry words soon led to blows. The fight became general, and all kinds of firearms and knives were brought out and used with deadly effect.

A strong force of the Civil Guard was called out, and, with great difficulty restored order. The casualties totaled three killed, four seriously wounded and a considerable number with slight injuries.
