WATER POWERS ATTRACT

Possibilities in Oregon to Be Made Subject of Special Report With View to Conservation by Geological Survey.

OREGONIAN NEWS BUREAU, Washington, May 8.—Before the Government can make much progress looking to the conservation of water powers in the state of Oregon, the Geological Survey will be obliged to make rather extensive examinations of the various streams of the state to determine their power possibilities, and the approximate location of desirable power sites.

In a general way, it is known that there are attractive power possibilities on most of the mountain streams, both in Eastern and Western Oregon, but to what extent these streams may be used for power development is not known, and will not be known until the Geological Survey, under instructions from Secretary Ballinger, makes hasty surveys, which, in some instances, will result in the withdrawal of such sites from entry or filing pending legislation by Congress.

The most important streams in the state for development of water power are those heading in the high perpetual snow-capped Cascade Mountains and dropping rapidly to the sea level.
