Old Wage Scale Is Agreed To and Open Shop Will Not

Of the 196 competitors who attacked a 590-yards bullseye, 15 inches wide, only eight failed to make a perfect score, and they failed only by five points or less—a record for the Hale Settlement Are Very Brief.

> There will be no strike of the union | them. grainhandlers in Portland this season, nor will this city's vast grain exports be diverted to Puget Sound. As unexpectedly as the sudden declaration of an open shop and a flat wage smale of 30 cents an hour by the exporting houses of Baifour, Guthrie & Co., the Portland Flouring Mills Company and Kerr, Gifford & Co., came the adjustment of the whole difficulty yesterday, and the resumption of business under a contract exactly similar to the one that expired in April, the union's refusal to ratify

April, the union's refusal to railfy which caused the trouble.

Just half an hour after a committee from the union went up to see a committee of the exporters in the office of Kerr. Gifford & Co., in the Concord building, yesterday morning, 'just to talk it over a bit,' everything was settled, everybody was satisfied, and the incident was officially closed.

The two committees met at 11 o'clock. At 11:15 they were deep in the matter. At 11:20 it was all done and settled, and the exporters' committee was going one way back to its deaks, while the union committee was bound the other way to pass the good word on to 'the hops.' The committee of the exporters was composed of Peter Keyr, chairman, of Keyr, Gifford & Co.; Theodore B. Wilcox, of the Portland Flouring Mills Company, and D. A. Partuillo, of Balfour, Guthrie & Co.; while the union committee consisted of the promiters. W. M. Clark, and the secrethe union committee consisted of the president, W. M. Clark, and the secretary, Joseph Foley, of the grainhandlers' organization, and A. E. Deyee, P. M. Sullivan, J. Hawk and James Dickson of the executive.

on of the executive committee.
And this is how it was all fixed up:
The union men on their side volun-larily agreed to sign the contract for iarily agreed to sign the contract of its cents an hour for an eight-hour day and 50 cents an hour overtime, which they refused to ratify last Thursday. And on their side the exporters agreed to withdraw the open-shop policy at the Puget Sound rate of 30 cents an hour, and to accept the union's proposal to sign the contract. to sign the contract.

Verbal Contract Made.

The contract entered into yesterday was temporarily a verbal one on both sides. This was agreed to by mutual consent, for although the union men declared their willingness then and declared their willingness then and there to affix their signatures to last year's contract, which was on file in the office, it was finally concluded to wait until an entirely new instrument in exact facsimile of the old one can be drawn up. This will be done by Monday or Tucsday. But in the meantime both parties consider the verbal agreement equally binding. The new contract will be for a period of one year, and will date from the expiration of the old one at the end of last April.

year, and will date from the expiration of the old one at the end of last April.

Tomorrow, or by Tuesday at the latest, all the men who were furned off Thursday night will be back at work.

In a degree, the settlement of the difficulty is a victory for both employers and employes. It is a victory for the employers insofar as the members of the union have come to exactly the terms great damage has been done so far, but if it had continued many days, it would have been serious. The men finally realized the seriousness of the situation and agreed to sign up. In consideration of that we consented to withdraw the open-shop."

"I shall immediately give orders to have wheat continue to come here over the North Bank road, instead of going to the Sound, as we had ordered, said T. B. Wilcox, of the Portland Flouring Mills. "We want to do all our business here."

"It all amounts to the union having accepted our offer made last April," said D. A. Pattullo, "I am glad it s settled, for it would have been very serious for this city. We will now send all the

this city. We will now send all the wheat here we can reasonably ship."

"It was a desire on the part of the members of the union to promote the very best interests of Portiand that led them to sign the contract." said Secretary Pouch, of the Longshoremen. "They were clearly entitled to more money—for rents and cost of living are constantly going higher—but rather than lose to the city the big business that would have been diverted to the Sound as the result of the strike, they preferred to give in. It was done entirely for the sake of Portland and its people. The union men have the interests of the city as much at heart as the exporters. And the action was entirely voluntary on their part. It can say that the longshoremen brought no pressure of any kind to bear upon pressure of any kind to bear upon Much at Stake.

Joseph Foley, secretary of the Grand-handlers' Union, discussed the case freely. 'Realizing how very important and even vital to the welfare of the city was the prevention of the loss of the wheat business to Portland,' said Mr. Foley, 'our union decided to accept the wage scale of the old contract. While we did not doubt our ability to maintain our position if it came to a strike, still we saw that this would inevitably result in causing the shippers to send most of Joseph Foley, secretary of the Grandwe saw that this would inevitably result in causing the shippers to send most of their grain to the Sound. During the present season, at least, almost all their business would have gone there. That would have started them to shipping from the Sound, and it is much easier to divert business away from a town than to divert it back again. The city would have been a heavy loser. A waterfront strike, with as much at stake as this, is a very serious matter to a town. We did did not want to bring all this about if we could hep it.

a very serious matter to a war and a very serious matter to a did not want to bring all this about if we could help it.

"Then our executive committee, in its investigation of the situation thoroughly took into consideration the fact that sithough we fully believe that our greater efficiency and the increased cost of living in the last few years entitled us to a raise, we are nevertheless better paid now than the grainhandlers in any other city on the Coast. So we conclude that as it was, we were doing pretty well, and would better take it and be satisfied. Knowing this, and also considering that the grainhandlers on the Sound are not organized, we saw if we should strike, and the exporters tried to enforce the open shop, we would not have so much public sentiment behind us as we otherwise would have bad. It was not easy to get the union to see it in that way at first, but at the meeting last night every first, but at the meeting last night every point of the problem was thoroughly threshed out. The executive committee was finally given full authority to act, and what we did was in consequence. "Whether we won or lost it would have gone against us. We realized that the experiers could send their grain up to the Sound, and if we finally won our strike. Sound, and if we finally won our strike there would be no more wheat left here to handle. If we lost, then we would only have been working all the time to only have been working all the time to install an open shop. Even at that, if the exporters had tried to be subborn, or if the matter had gone many days longer unsettled. I think the members of the union would have demanded a strike."
