NEW PRESIDENT OF COMMERCIAL CLUB IS PRESENTED WEAPONS AND LETTERS

Portland, Oregon, Jany 26, 1910.

Mr. Harvey Beckwith President Portland Com'l Club, Knockers! Table, Club.

Esteemed Sir: -- . In presenting to you these implements of authority and re-inforcement of power - they are not loving cups, you may com-prehend, - we desire you to distinctly understand that they are not things of beauty and joys forever, but are made to do business with. We do not care a rap whom you may use them on, so long as you do use them, and we caution you that at the end of your term of office if you do not have the proper number of notches out in the stick, or a sufficient number of bouquets attached to the "gavil" there will be singing you will not hear.

REMEMBER, "this world has no charms for a man whose wife is a widow." SELAH! Bnough! !

INSIGNIA OF OFFICE GIVEN TO HARVEY BECKWITH BY THE KNOCKERS' CLUB

THE "big stick" and a gavel that would do service as a piledriver are the "weapons" supplied to Harvey Beckwith, new elected president of the Portland Commercial Club, with which to uphoid his administration over the business men's organization. It goes without saying, to those who are familiar with Commercial Club affairs, that these "weapons" are the gift of the Knockers'

Club, whose members are always on the stick and gavel being accompanied by the letter shown in the illustration. The Knockers' Club is composed of about 20 Commercial Club members, who always sit at the same table at luncheon.

True to their name, they "knock" on every possible occasion, the only condition being that the "knocking" is always ably wielded by a man with the avoir dupois of Mr. Roosevelt's successor in office. The presentation occurred at the Commercial Club luncheon yesterday, the

BURKHART'S BIPLANE READY WITHIN MONTH

Oregon Inventor Has Every Confidence Machine Which Has Taken Him Long to Build Is Constructed on Right Principle.

C. BURKHART, whose unfinished aeroplane has been viewed by large crowds each day at the automobile show, although expressing faith in the success of his enterprise, is determined to continue working for a perfect machine in case the one now being constructed does , not meet expectations when completed. Before graduating from Cornell University, Mr. Burkhart developed an interest in flying machines, and immediately after leaving college in June, 13%, he began the construction of a machine, which gave him an insight into the problems of aerial structed for that purpose. To put on wheels would mean much additional wheels would mean much additional weight, which he does not care to have at the beginning.

It will perhaps take another month to complete the machine, Mr. Burkhart said yesterday, although by rushing the work It can be finished at an earlier date. No effort will be made to fly until the weath. er has improved.

The biplane being constructed by Mr. Burkhart is provided with a 40-horsepower Curties engine, and it is hoped by the builder that he can maintain a speed of about 35 miles an hour. It will be driven by a six-foot propeller, which will make 1400 revolutions a minute.

Constantly since that time he has been planning and studying methods for completing a successful airship. The one he is now constructing has several features of his own invention, chief of these being an arrangement for lowering and raising the lifting wings in such a way as constantly to provide a balance for the machine.

Owing to the lack of knowledge of the necessary nature of the available mechanies, Mr. Burkhart is finding much trouble in getting his machine of Oregon spruce, and when completed it will weigh about 459 pounds without the operator.

Until his machine has been tried out the machine will not be a success," declared Mr. Burkhart, "but of course, until it is tried its ability cannot be determined. In a
