If you want to see the most enthusiastic and noisiest crowd of gymnasts, acrobats, boxers and wrestlers in Portland, go down to the People's Institute gymnasium, Fourth and Burnside streets, any Tuesday night, and watch the antics of the members of the Portland Newsboys' Association.

The "newsies" have a real live organization, with a capable and energetic president from their own number, and some of Portland's prominent citizens who are backing the association, for the other officers.

There has been a newsboys' association of one sort or another in Portland for several years, but the present one is the first really successful organization. It has been formed about two months, and during this time regular weekly meetings and class periods have been held Tuesday nights. About 60 or 80 boys on the average attend, and there are probably no members of any athletic club in the city who get more enjoyment out of their gatherings in sociability, athletics and recreation.

THE LONG AND SHORT OF IT.

Schneider Leading Spirit.

The leading spirit in the association is Paul Schneider, the president. Paul is the only one who can handle the urchins, and the only one for whom they stand around, and do just as they are told. The boys have never known restraint, and consequently find it very hard to submit to the discipline of their instructors.

Citizens Take Interest.

Mrs. W. H. Chapin and the Daughters of the American Revolution at present are among the greatest boosters for the newsboys' club. D. E. Keasey, once a newsboy himself, is their greatest friend in time of need. When the boys get into mix-ups among themselves or with other persons, as they do frequently, or when any of them are taken to the juvenile court for discipline, Mr. Keasey is promptly called on for assistance, and he has rescued the lads from many embarrassing positions. Mrs. Chapin is vice-president of the association and Mr. Keasey is secretary. Ralph W. Hoyt acts as treasurer.

Instructor Prominent Athlete.

Professor Frischkorn is also instructor for the Concordia Club. He is an athlete of considerable fame and held the bantamweight wrestling championship of the Northwest for ten years. He has never been thrown in a wrestling bout. In the Turnout, in Chicago during the World's Fair in 1903 he took the third prize for the all-around championship, competing with 196 teams, which included 400 athletes.

boxing, wrestling, class work and calisthenics. As boxers and wrestlers they have few equals, considering their size, but when it comes to standing in line for class drill and united effort "the bunch" is inclined to be rather wobbly. Professor Frischkorn, the instructor, has the time of his life trying to get the lads lined up, and a worse time trying to get them to "stay put." He will get the class in position, but as soon as his back is turned a scuffle will start.

Citizens Take Interest.

Previously all the offices in the association were held by the boys, but, owing to the great losses for the newsboys' club, D. E. Keasey, once a newsboy himself, is their greatest friend in time of need. When the boys get into mix-ups among themselves or with other persons, as they do frequently, or when any of them are taken to the juvenile court for discipline, Mr. Keasey is promptly called on for assistance, and he has rescued the lads from many embarrassing positions. Mrs. Chapin is vice-president of the association and Mr. Keasey is secretary. Ralph W. Hoyt acts as treasurer.

The purpose of the Newsboys' Association is to promote the welfare of the newsboys, physically and mentally. It is patterned after the Boston Association and has adopted rules against gambling, smoking and other misdemeanors. The organization is entirely independent and has a self-governing policy.

The official list of the association includes an executive committee, which meets every week and discusses policies and makes plans for improvement. The members of the committee are: John Bowman, Jean Rosenkrantz, Leo Dautoff, A. Cohen, Phil Paulsky and Hyman Schwartz.

Paul Scherker has been writing to newsboys' associations of other cities to learn their methods and ask advice. The text of the letter he has been sending to the large associations of the country is as follows:

"We have recently started in this city a Newsboys' Association, and as we are desirous of securing new ideas concerning this work, we take the liberty of addressing you this communication. If convenient kindly send us all the literature and information concerning your organization. This will greatly help and oblige us, and at any time we can reciprocate we will be glad to do so."

One of the largest newsboys' associations in the United States is at Toledo, Ohio. It is well supported by the residents of that city and is in a most prosperous condition. The association at Pittsburgh has an unusually fine building. Seattle has had a successful association for some time.

NEW HEADGEAR IS BIG IN SIZE AND PRICE, AND OF MOST GAUDY COLORS

Creations of Chicago Milliners Are Fearful to Behold by Mere Man Who Pays the Bills—Brokers Refuse to Believe Story of James A. Patten's Manchester Expulsion.

BY JONATHAN PALMER.

CHICAGO, March 19.—(Special.)—Spring millinery openings are bearing out all the fearsome forecasts about what women are to wear on their heads the coming season. Passionate hues are the rule and the policy of expansion is to be carried to the bitter end. There are hats as red as the blood of Caesar, blue as the skies of Slippon and yellow as the harvest moon. The fourth dimension—the price—is as big and broad and sky-reaching as the chapeau itself.

"And what is that one worth?" asked the Oregonian correspondent of a saleswoman in a department store, pointing to a mass of flowers that looked as if they might have come in carload lots from Portland.

"Only a hundred and sixteen dollars," replied she, exuding the blasé coolness in which she had been schooled. "I beg your pardon," she added. "I've misread the figures; it is a hundred and sixty-six. Isn't it a beauty?"

It was the sort of creation which causes the tall woman to stoop first and to toss her neck afterwards to one side that she may gain entrance into a streetcar of the pay-as-you-enter style. The conductors on the elevated roads have come to the point of boldness where they shout a warning to duck when the outrageous girl with the outrageous steps from the platform into the car. It is a foregone conclusion that stars of the salooners of a kaleidoscope of vivid colors, a moving flower bed with yard-long feathers and argent and rooster tails towering up here and there above the beds of splendor.

Dresses will be as radiant in proportion as hats. The soft, soothing shades of other years are to give way to glories that Joseph in his coat never dreamed of. If there be any quiet in the panorama of sartorial fancies, more than will furnish it. His garb is to be saner than ever. No peg-top trousers, no curved flaps or coat cuffs—just a normal fabric cut on normal lines is to be his contribution to the cavalcade of dress. Anything else will argue the wearer out of the lists of the elect. But the women's hats! Three months' rent in one chapeau—three months' rent which, capitalized at 3 per cent, would represent $3000! Verily the cost of living, with pigs heading toward $12 and a few less crackers in the box, is a very present problem.

Chicago naturally was shocked to read that the man who has been her most widely advertised citizen in the last two years should have been driven by a mob out of the Manchester Cotton Exchange. James A. Patten's friends said they could not credit the truth of the newspaper stories. There must be some mistake, a misinterpretation of human conduct. However, there is something about the Manchester Cotton Exchange building that distinguishes it from the Chicago Board of Trade building. At the top of the big dome surmounting the former, in letters said to be at least four feet high, is this inscription: "A good name is rather to be desired than riches, and loving kindness rather than silver." It is doubtful if Mr. Patten read this legend before he entered the doorway below, or having read it, that he was seriously impressed with the import of the words.

Jokes Frequent on Exchange.

The men of the Board of Trade in Chicago, on second thought, look upon the Manchester incident as a good joke. The members who go on the floor and make the bedlam that sends prices up and down are only grown boys in spirit, for all the gray hairs the barter and trade causes them prematurely. Woe to the member who appears on the floor on September 1 with a straw hat. The of-ending headgear, true to a long established custom, is quickly torn into bits and scattered on the floor like the memorandum leaflets the operators use.

It occurred to the fun-makers that it would be a good thing to take revenge out of John Bull by hazing one of the English members of the board. Harry Scott was picked as the scapegoat. He bears the sobriquet "the King's own," carries a walking stick that looks like a telegraph pole, reduced, and walks 14 miles daily before breakfast. Scull sented trouble in time and started on a quick "hike" to Newwood Park in Mackenzie, who comes from Canada, was chosen for an understudy in the part of the goat, but he was saved by virtue of the fact that a river was named after one of his forebears.

"Wets" in their campaign for the retention of the saloon are emphasizing the economic aspects of a dry Chicago. They submit figures showing that brewers and wholesale and retail liquor dealers have $50,000,000 of capital invested here, practicing all of which would be confiscated if Chicago were made anti-saloon territory; that $12,000,000 is spent yearly for the lums; that large plants were paid out that the saloon interests contribute half a million dollars yearly to charities that they give employment to 26,000 men and women; that they are paying $7,200,000 into the city treasury, contribute an amount almost equal to that derived from taxes on persons and real property.

Saloonkeepers pay out annually $11,734,000 for rent, $8,700,000 for meats, $10,865,000 for cigars, $2,530,000 for light, $2,330,000 for coal, $4,800,000 for groceries, $600,000 for milk and $5,235,000 for soft drinks. Thirty per cent of Chicago's liquor dealers, it is represented, make a bare living, and the rest make a small profit, 20 per cent make a fair profit and 10 per cent a good profit.

In answer to the "drys" content that 60 per cent of the capital invested in liquor interests here is foreign capital, the breweries being owned largely by Englishmen, the big plants were paid out of their present business, they could be devoted to the making of things that are beneficial to the consumer—breakfast foods, for instance, for the hungry wives and children. Arguing further, the anti-saloon spokesmen answer that the saloon interests would not raise a cent more for charity if they did not create the conditions which make charity necessary; that they give $5,000,000 to the city annually, not because they are patriots but because the municipality compels them to contribute a small share toward the expense of taking care of the crime, pauperism and insanity which they cause. And so the battle goes on.

Death and a saloon license made an embarrassing comedy for Mayor Busee and Chief of Police Steward. The tangle grew out of the attempt to revoke the license issued to John Gaynor before that gentleman died. The thing was cancelled but it wouldn't stay cancelled, although the Mayor had succeeded in closing the doors of the dram shop in question and the salooners of the saloon ordinance did not take into account the fact that the estate of a man might want a saloon license left by him or that he might be involved in the handling down of such an inheritance.

The ordinance requires that when a license is revoked the police reported back that they couldn't notify Gaynor. They didn't know where he had gone and they couldn't get it, anyhow. The city legal department suggested that the license was cancelled automatically when Gaynor died. But here another difficulty arose. The code provides that a license cannot be transferred except at the beginning of a license period. Hence, if the ruling were to stand the death of every saloonkeeper "between times" means one less grogshop for Chicago since the ordinance prohibits the issuance of any more licenses.

"Anyhow, the saloon is closed," said Mayor Busee, "and it will remain closed until we hear from Gaynor."

It is not often the dignified gentlemen of the Supreme Court of Illinois hand out a decision which recedes as a joke upon themselves. They did something perilously near it when they declared the parole act invalid. Alet from causing anxiety in the state led hundreds of men released from the penitentiaries might have to go back and others sent up under the law might have to be turned loose, there was consternation lest the decision would wipe out a lot of good state jobs and make some politicians go to work.

It is too long a story for detailing here, but the decision took exception to the phraseology of the titles and bodies of legislative acts. In some cases a certain phraseology would invalidate a whole act, in others parts of an act. Applying the principle to laws on the statute book, it is held by some of the state-house lawyers that 15 boards and individual jobs are virtually wiped out by the Supreme Court. The joke on the jurists lies in the fact that the laws under which the salaries of the justices have been raised from $4000 to $10,000 are open to the criticism of other laws attacked.

It was a delicate situation and Attorney-General Stead came to the rescue by filing a petition asking the Supreme Court to review its finding. If the higher court should not reverse itself, not only will the high cost of living come nearer home to it, but some of the apparently well entrenched state institutions will go into the discard.

Age Leads to Suicide.

Two men who had passed the age of 60 committed suicide on the same day in Chicago this week because their gray hairs absolutely prevented their getting a position.

"I am too old to get a job as a bookkeeper," gasped Silas I. Tuniso, gasping the words after he slashed his neck in a way that caused his death later in the County Hospital. "My gray hairs brought me to this."

The other victim of the "age of young men" was Ferdinand Koll, aged 64, who had been out of employment since Oc-
