

SUBJECT OF 'DRY'S' STATE TICKET PLANNED

Resolutions Call on Prohibitionists to Write It on Hotel Registers.

STATE TICKET IS NAMED

Convention Makes Platform Condemning Grills and "High-Toned" Saloons—Bank Guaranty Plank Not Indorsed.

- NOMINEES FOR STATE OFFICES: For Governor—A. E. Eaton, Union County. For Secretary of State—N. A. Davis, Yamhill County. For State Treasurer—Leslie Butler, Hood River County. For State Printer—William Hickson, Multnomah County. For Superintendent of Public Instruction—R. R. Steele, Multnomah County. For Judge of the Supreme Court—J. H. Brown, Wasco County. For Chief Justice—W. P. Elmore. For Congressmen, First District—W. P. Elmore. For Congressmen, Second District—George E. Brown, Wasco County. For Joint Representative, Multnomah and Clackamas counties—A. W. Hankhausen.

Prohibitionists of Oregon yesterday concluded a two days' session at the Y. M. C. A. auditorium with the nomination of a state ticket. Not having polled 25 per cent of the votes cast for Congressmen at the last election, the Prohibitionists are not bound by all of the terms of the primary law of Oregon, and it is probable that the Secretary of State will certify their nominations on the official ballot for the Fall election without other formalities. But the Prohibition state committee will take no chances in the year 1910, when the leaders predict such a sweeping wave of sentiment for state-wide prohibition that they decided to get out a nominating petition in addition.

The nominations were greeted with the wildest enthusiasm, and the name of the standard-bearer at the head of the fight, A. E. Eaton, Mr. Eaton is an influential citizen of East Oregon, described as a Daniel Webster on the stump, and having acquired merit by presenting Willamette University with a building. N. A. Davis, of Yamhill County, and Leslie Butler, of Hood River, are bankers. The campaign will be in charge of a central committee, of which J. P. Newell was elected chairman, W. E. Critchlow, secretary, and B. Lee Paget, treasurer. The platform committee is not confined to counties, but is made up of party members in various towns of the state. Leslie Butler, of Hood River, presided over the convention and W. E. Critchlow was the secretary.

Hotel Gage Taken Up.

The only fight on the floor of the convention was over the report of the committee on the hotel gage, as prepared by I. H. Amos, C. J. Bright and W. P. Elmore. The platform was intended to carry the fight directly into the camp of the Greater Oregon Home Rule Association, under which the hotelmen of the state are gathering to give battle to prohibition. The resolution characterizes hotel grills and the "glided, high-toned saloons" as more dangerous than the dives. An effort was made to expunge or tone down the language, as being more proper for the stump, but an impassioned speech by Mr. Amos, who is a candidate for Congress, carried the report through as written. "I believe in saying just what we mean in this campaign," said Mr. Amos, "and we intend to have struck the popular chord. A resolution was immediately adopted pledging all prohibitionists to sign the Prohibition Day in 1910" every hotel register where they are quartered until after the coming election.

The Prohibitionists recognize the hotelmen's organization as the strongest opposition we have to overcome," said I. H. Amos, "and we have the best well let them know how many of their patrons are fighting. It may cause some of them to weaken."

National Platform Indorsed.

At the Prohibition convention of Oregon, in convention assembled, this 11th day of June, 1910, do most earnestly commend to the people of this state, the declaration of principles of the Prohibition party of the United States, assembled in Columbus, Ohio, on July 16, 1908, as an eminently wise and comprehensive statement of the reforms which our country from the beginning has steadfastly contended. We are confident that the reforms which these reforms are steadily making and we look forward to the day when the party in sympathy with the prohibition cause shall forever cease from our land. When the revenue now wrung from the liquor traffic at such frightful cost shall give place to revenue derived from equitable graduated income and inheritance taxes. When child labor shall cease in mines, workshops and factories. When the laws governing marriage and divorce shall be in better order. When suffrage shall be based on intelligence and ability. When the Government, with a firm hand, shall regulate all corporations doing an interstate business. When, through the creation of a permanent commission, the tariff shall cease to be a source of contention and the party in sympathy with the prohibition cause shall be elected by direct vote of the people. When the mineral and forest resources of the country shall not be exploited in the interest of plundering corporations. When the majority of the people shall be expended on the improvement of highways and waterways instead of being wasted in the support of the armaments with which to make war upon other nations. When the equipment that perish almost daily shall be replaced by more durable and useful things. When we shall have strict enforcement of all laws instead of official tolerance amounting practically to license. Law Enforcement Pledged.

In the contest before us for state-wide prohibition we pledge our most earnest efforts for the success of the prohibition cause. We pledge our support and the law for enforcement thereof, and that these new enactments, when they shall become the law of the state, may not be brought into disrepute by lax enforcement, we hold it to be our duty to nominate for every office with the right of the people, candidates who, if elected, can be depended upon to enforce the law. We pledge our scientific and consistent action on the part of those who cast their ballots for prohibition. We hold that every citizen has a right to ask and expect, without question, that the power of the Prohibition party which is in the vanguard of the death-knell of the liquor traffic in this state, whether state-wide prohibition or otherwise, shall be maintained in the lowly and the high-toned alike, and that the young manhood and young womanhood of our country strikes the glided high-toned saloon, that the glided high-toned saloon, that the downward course is steep. The low down is simply the landing place on the way to the morgue and the drunkard's grave.

Places Not Contested.

Following the adoption of the platform a nominating committee consisting of E. L. Johnson, B. Lee Paget, George E. Brown, L. E. F. Lozier and T. P. Hackelman reported the names of the candidates selected for places on the ticket, all of them being elected by acclamation. The following-named delegates were in attendance: Multnomah County—L. B. Blackman, I. M. Gillingham, A. G. Goode, A. W. Fausch, E. G. Eaton, R. W. Overlin, John A. Fay, Oscar Alderton, R. M. Jones, C. B. Leach, L. E. F. Lozier, W. E. Fellow, Rev. L. A. Wells, G. Gunner, G. E. Pilsbry, W. E. Carrington, J. H. Root, J. A. Sternberg, P. G. Schmitt, I. H. Amos, J. P. Newell, T. P. Hackelman, Daniel, G. W. Jones, J. J. Handsaker, J. E. Hall, J. A. Harrison, E. T. Johnson, J. R. Lamb, C. Snow, B. Wolverson, P. L. Possom, E. L. Loebe, H. Nichols, E. P. Northrup, F. W. Miller, S. H. Foster, H. A. Deek, J. F. Hanson, J. W. Smith, P. G. Schmitt, C. Lewis, Linn County, P. Hackelman, W. P. Elmore; Jackson County, Grant Sloop; Clackamas County, Grant Sloop; Yamhill County, Adam Buehler; Hood River County, Leslie Butler; Washington County, J. W. Smith; Clatsop County, Grant Sloop; Clatsop County, C. J. Bright; Clatsop County, W. A. Davis, R. H. Chaffee; Clatsop County, Grant Sloop; Clatsop County, Grant Sloop; Clatsop County, Grant Sloop.

BOTH SIDES ARE FIRM

NEITHER DRAYMEN NOR TEAMSTERS WILL YIELD.

Strike That Has Lasted 11 Days Seems as Far From Settlement as Ever.

The Draymen's Union has been on strike 11 days and the situation is practically unchanged. No negotiations looking to a settlement are pending, and each side is holding aloof from the other. The Draymen's Association will not grant the demands of the union, and the union is just as positive in its stand that no union teamsters will be employed until all demands are met. No compromise offers have been made and the opposing forces are as far apart as when the strike was started. The union says it has 200 teamsters on strike and the majority of these are picketed duty. As fast as the Draymen's Association placed non-union men in charge of its teams the union pickets persuaded them to quit. No pickets were allowed to pass by either side, but in the meantime construction of several large buildings has been retarded for the lack of steel. In some instances the Draymen's Association has been unable to make deliveries and in others contractors have been unable to accept deliveries made by non-union men for fear of pickets. The headquarters of the Teamsters' Union was thrown into a ferment of excitement yesterday afternoon when several merchants called up and asked if the strike had been declared off. The answer was reported to be a negative one. The union immediately sent out emissaries to deny the report. The answer was a negative one. It was also made that no settlement had been effected and that the union teamsters would not report for work Monday except on the terms demanded.

LOST MAN FINDS HIMSELF

Wanderer Doesn't Know How He Drifted From Michigan to Cuba.

NEW YORK, June 10.—After days of wandering with knowledge of his own identity lost to him, at the end of which time his normal faculties returned in a strange land, Walter J. Fisher, a merchant of Pontiac, Mich., got back to his home in Michigan yesterday. Fisher disappeared from his home on the night of April 15. For nine days thereafter he wandered, eating, sleeping and traveling, his movements apparently governed by a second self. When Mr. Fisher had been escorted to his home in Pontiac, Mich., he was found when he awoke from sleep beside a stream in Cuba, 40 miles west from Havana. Fisher had no recollection of what had taken place since he had left his home. When he tried to talk with men who spoke Spanish he found that he spoke English, and found that they spoke a strange tongue and could not understand him, he believed he was the victim of a hallucination. But when the word "Cuba" was repeated often it dawned upon him that he was not that island. He realized that he must have traveled to New York or Florida and taken passage for Cuba, but how he did not know. After eating a meal and breaking for a few hours' rest, Fisher set out penniless for Havana. There he told his strange story to Consul General G. W. Rogers, who called Fisher's brother in Pontiac, Mich. Money was sent to the Consul, who booked passage for the man who had personally for an audience with the Prince Rospicinski, commander-in-chief of the noble guard, recognizing that a gross injustice had been done, applied personally for an audience with the Spanish Cardinal, who bluntly declined to receive him also. Hence the ferment among the 126 Papal soldiers who have forwarded a round robin to Pope Pius X. Count Salemi recently married the Baroness Gertrude, daughter of Baron Frederich von Hugel, the well known modernist

CAMBRIDGE STUDENTS MAKE MERRY AT COLONEL ROOSEVELT'S EXPENSE

Mirth of Undergraduates Detracts From Solemnity of Ceremony, Conferring Degree on ex-President, and at Its Close "Teddy" Bear Is Dangled Before Him From Gallery.

CAMBRIDGE, May 26.—(Special.)—Theodore Roosevelt told the undergraduates of Cambridge University today that no ex-President of the United States had ever had a better time than he. He certainly had a good time among the undergraduates and the dons of Cambridge. And he has been having a delightful time personally during most of his stay in England. That it was not a good time officially which have sobered all England and made the thoughts of the whole world turn to the English people in sympathy. Such distinction as was possible under the conditions has been conferred on him. After King Edward's funeral he was received by Queen Alexandra at Buckingham Palace, and in a long conversation she thanked him for the sympathy of the American people. He has dined with some of the most famous of the big game hunters and lit- tle men of London. He has been received by King George and Queen Mary. He has been made an honorary member of the Royal Society of Arts. And today he received from the University of Cambridge an honorary degree, and from the undergraduates of a most picturesque character. It is a "perfectly corking" time which Mr. Roosevelt usually has under such conditions. It was the cold which still clings to him. Mr. Roosevelt arrived at the little Cambridge station on one of the regular trains. He was accompanied by Mrs. Roosevelt and Mrs. Longworth. Kermit and Ethel Roosevelt have gone to Scotland. The ceremony was held at the station by Canon Mason, the vice-chancellor of the university, and his wife. Canon Mason wore a top hat, while Mr. Roosevelt was dressed in the conventional frock coat and silk hat. The meeting was quite informal and there was only a small crowd at the station to cheer him. He was taken directly to Canon Mason's luncheon there.

The first duty he performed after luncheon was to go to Emmanuel College, where John Harvard had been a student. He did this in honor of his own alma mater, which Harvard founded. Then he was taken to the Senate Hall on King's Parade to receive his degree. The Senate Hall is not large and there had been a great demand for tickets to witness the ceremony. Those who could not obtain tickets gathered on the street in front of the hall and a squad of policemen were kept in order. The crowd was as dignified as one would expect in a university town. The crowd stood in the street, and the Senate Hall was filled with undergraduates and dons entered the hall—some in crimson gowns, some in gowns of black silk—of very much frayed; some in gowns trimmed with what looked like white catfur. The undergraduates in their mortarboards and scant little gowns of rusty black had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched through the street clearing the way. Behind came two beadles, a squad of policemen very neatly kept, and then came Theodore Roosevelt in cap and crimson gown, escorted by Canon Mason. It was not a very impressive spectacle because Mr. Roosevelt and his host were chatting away as cheerfully and informally as though they were having a little fun with the university's graduates at Emmanuel College. It confronted Mr. Roosevelt with paw outstretched, as he passed through the quadrangle. At the Senate House, he was seated facing the platform, and immediately after he had been greeted by Dr. Sandys, the public orator of the university, Dr. Jackson, the senior proctor, began the ceremony with prayer. But the recital of the formal service demanded that at intervals he should raise his cap and make obeisance. He did this mechanically, swiftly—but each obeisance was greeted by the undergraduates with half-suppressed mirth and applause. These undergraduates completely filled the two long sides of the gallery and hung over its railing. At the ends were seated guests—many of them Scotch—who seemed to find as much entertainment in the undergraduates' larks as in the ceremony on the floor below. When Sandys read an address in Latin, re- cording the deeds of Mr. Roosevelt during his period as President, his hunt in Africa and even his tour of Europe had been admitted early to the galleries. Just before 2 o'clock a squad of police marched