Combination of Seashore and Mountains Attractive to Recreation Parties and Sportsmen.

There is probably no place in the country where more of the outdoor enjoyments are to be found. Pleasure-seekers travel hundreds of miles to reach any one of such places, while with Coos Bay as a center one can find, and within a radius of a few miles, almost every imaginable kind of vacation, from the most strenuous big game shooting to quiet restfulness.

The resort features of Coos Bay have never been exploited to any great extent, probably because there was no railroad into the place to make it easy of access, but from either San Francisco or Portland it is a pleasant ocean trip for anyone who enjoys sea travel. The overland routes from Roseburg or Drain to Coos Bay extend through one of the most beautiful parts of Oregon, from a scenic point of view, and now that autos are beginning to supplant the old-time stages it is likely that many more will make the overland trip.

However, the fact that the country has not been penetrated or disturbed by a railroad adds much charm to the resort, and to the sporting features of the country.

Coos Bay has always been famous as a trout-fishing district and deserves all that has ever been said of it. Probably the favorite place for this sport is the Ten-Mile Lake district. Several lakes form a chain of large, fresh water bodies, very near to the sea and some distance north of Coos Bay. The lakes are reached by gasoline boat and mountain trails. The lake scenery is unexcelled and it is said of the trout fishing there that it cannot be beaten anywhere. The lakes are so large that the supply of trout is practically inexhaustible. Many who have traveled far in search of sport entwine over the lakes.

Many summer homes of various sizes have been erected in the lake district and the place promises to become a famous Oregon summer resort.

With Coos Bay as the outlet there are about a dozen rivers and streams that go back into the mountain country. For boating in the little gasoline launches there are miles of rivers that can be covered, and all affording delightful scenery. The most popular of these streams is Coos River. It is the highway for a big dairy district, but is equally as noted as an outlet stream. The choice spots along the river banks have become the sites of summer bungalows and many of the local people spend the summer up the river. There is fine trout fishing, as well as boating and bathing and a warm climate to be enjoyed. On the bay and tributary rivers about 300 gasoline launches are used and many of these are pleasure boats. They are the chief means of transportation to the resorts and Coos River has its regular lines of little boats giving almost as good service as an electric car line.

If angling for trout is too mild for the sportsman he can have great sport at deep-sea fishing. Struddy little fishing boats cross over the bar to the ocean fishing banks. Lingcod, halibut, redfish, flounder and many other varieties are caught. There is enough danger attached to the sport to make it interesting for the venturesome fisherman.

The ocean beach is one of the big attractions of Coos Bay. There are many fine camping spots, wonderful rock caves to explore in low tide and no end of shellfish to find. Over 20 varieties of clams, all of which are eligible for a chowder or a fry, rock oysters and enormous crabs abound. Clambakes and camping parties are big events throughout the summer.

Another fine resort beach is at Bandon. For a distance of several miles below the city, the beach is lined with beautiful and gigantic rocks. The city is to build a board walk leading to the beach and the place is frequented constantly in the summertime by the people of the city and the visitors. Several summer cottages have been built on the cliffs overlooking the beach. It is here that the beautiful spots, which are in such demand by visitors, are found. Probably no other part of the Oregon coast is as attractive as that which extends south of Bandon.

To find an entirely different climate and utterly different surroundings, one has but to travel in an opposite direction a few miles from Coos Bay and reach the mountains. On all sides, the mountains furnish fine camping places. The scenery is beautiful beyond description. For one not acquainted with the country, it is worth a trip to the mountains to see the big trees, if for nothing else. There are mountains close to Coos Bay, but if one will travel for about 30 miles back, the Coast Range can be reached. Absolute wildness can be found and, of course, a stranger cannot go back into the mountains without a guide. But the stage roads have been so improved during the past two years that auto trips or journeys on horseback can be taken to the interior and all of the beauties of the mountains enjoyed. For a tramp on foot, no place is better than to the Coast Range as to Roseburg. As for the camera enthusiast, he will get some pictures that cannot be duplicated anywhere.

In the hunting season, the whole country is a paradise for the man with a rifle. To find deer is plenty all one needs to do is to get a tip from some of the oldtimers as to the best places, or to secure a guide. Some of the hunting grounds are near, but many of the hunters prefer to go farther back into the mountains and carry on pack horses provisions for several weeks. There are many stanzas in the woods where hunters can stay.

Besides shooting deer, it is no great trick to kill panthers, wildcats or bears. If a man has two weeks' vacation and wants to hunt and get as far as possible away from everybody and everything, he should take a trip into Curry County, which is the next door neighbor of Coos County. The hunting there is fine and he can lose himself, as far as civilization is concerned, without any trouble.

For real wilderness, parts of Curry County are the best to be found in Oregon.

One of the finest hunting and fishing preserves in the country is in Curry County. It is owned by Edmund Croft, of Tacoma. Mr. Croft has 400 acres of his own and holds a lease on 2000 acres more, all for a hunting preserve. He kills everything from bears and deer to sealions and wild geese, and catches four or five different kinds of game fish.

Duck shooting is another of the great sports in the Coos Bay country. In the season, ducks are killed by the hundreds right on the bay and there are dozens of other places farther back, where the birds are less disturbed. The sand hills extending along the ocean north of Coos Bay make a favorite field for duck hunting. There are many little fresh water lakes where the ducks gather and several of these have been taken up and are held as private preserves or are owned by clubs. A dozen or more summer homes have been built in the sand hills and because it is easy to reach from the city, it is highly popular with the hunters.

All of these various sports and recreation places are easy to reach from Coos Bay and are not expensive. It really matters not what particular kind of vacation one wishes to spend. That is merely a matter of choice after one has arrived here, and if the seashore and fishing do not suit, it is easy to turn to the mountains and hunting, or to the lakes and rivers. If the resort chooses, he can always get back to Marshfield for a few days' rest at one of the best hotels in the state, or even can make the city hotel headquarters and visit all of the resort points.

With the long-hoped-for railroad into Coos Bay, these resort places will doubtless be enjoyed by many outsiders who do not now attempt to come because of the lack of railroad facilities. With such a variety of enjoyments, the locality can scarcely help being a famous one on the Coast.

at Bonneville, July 24. Nine hundred laundry-workers, and their friends, left the Union Depot at 8:30 A. M. for a day's outing, and a more delightful day could not have been selected. Baseball, boxing, dancing, tug-of-war and other games were indulged in and a good time enjoyed by those in attendance. The merry-makers returned to the city at 3:30 P. M. all voting that they had "the time of their lives."

CAN'T PUT ASIDE WOMEN

She Will Go More and More Into Business, Says This One.

PORTLAND, July 25.—(To the Editor.)—The United States Government's recent ruling against women in the civil service, and the similar measure taken by several of the leading railroads sometime since, gives food for reflection.

The editorial in The Oregonian yesterday referring to the advancement of Mr. Cortlyou and Mr. Loeb, mentions that "doubtless a number of bright, competent women began about the same time, but for obvious reasons none of these were transferred and retransferred, leading up to official station, etc." By "obvious reasons" it is presumed The Oregonian means unconstitutional reasons. Through what condition does such a reason exist?

The writer has made her living for a number of years through the medium of office work. She has demonstrated to herself and to her employers, on diverse occasions, that she could "go on," but when that crucial moment arrived she was told: "We recognize your ability. You can fill the position as well in every respect as a man but—it is against precedent you're a woman!" Many similar incidents have come under observation, including political "plums." "Unfortunately you are not a voter."

Women no longer are forced, through utter dependence, to subsist upon the crumbs falling from the table of a more or less distant kinsman. The joy of earning an independent livelihood has been learned. Perhaps not one of all these millions of self-respecting, self-supporting young women but would glad-become the helpmeet and homemaker for the right man—but he must be the right man, according to her ideas. If to some woman that man should never come, then in her effort to progress, what moral right has anyone through mere circumstance of sex to say: "So far shalt thou go and no farther. It is too late."

Should the drastic policy adopted by the great railroad corporations and the United States Government be followed by lesser institutions forcing women out of the industrial field they now occupy, it will simply result in their more and more fitting themselves for the various professional and for those lines of commercial and mercantile pursuits through which they will become ordinate rather than subordinate, employes instead of employe. What does that mean for the coming centuries?

the Indians in Newport, on the preceding Fourth of July. These details were of such a disgusting nature, that any fair-minded citizen of Newport will admit that the saloon of that city, two in number, and paying about a year into the city treasury, actually cost, excluding the loss of prestige as a resort, thousands of dollars in one day—July 4, 1910. The citizens of Newport will not forget the date I am sure—neither will the citizens of the Willamette Valley. Now, does Mr. Bessell wish the readers of The Oregonian to believe that liquor is not sold in the saloons, either directly or indirectly, to the Indians? Possibly he can hypnotize us to that effect, but not yet. In answer to his tactless suggestion that Dr. Penberg come over to Newport and help deal the men who are selling liquor to the Indians, I might suggest in reply that some of the leading business men of Newport could do this good work to much better advantage than Dr. Falkenberg could. Some day the pretty little seaside resort of Newport, Or., will join the procession of the cities of the country who have found that the saloon is a damage to any community, from a business standpoint, and help to realize that part of the Lord's prayer, which says: "Lead us not into temptation." Then, indeed, will there be nothing left to tempt the poor Indian, white as well as red, but the miserable "old piggee"—and we can make short work of him.

A novel ventilating system has recently been developed, which consists of a small electric fan connected to the window sill in such a manner that it may be operated either to draw in air from the outside or to exhaust the air from a room.

COLUMBIA'S SOURCE TO SEA

Veteran Steamboat Captain Recalls Trip to Revelstoke, B. C.

PASCO, Wash., July 26.—(To the Editor.)—An open Columbia River from "source to sea" is attracting serious attention along the entire length of that river, but not one in a hundred of the people living in the territory contiguous to the Columbia knows the fact that steamboats have been run the entire distance from Astoria to Revelstoke, B. C., above Revelstoke, except for portages at The Dalles, Celilo and at Kettle Falls.

I suggest that as a matter of education an excursion be organized to take a steamboat from Fort Stevens to the Big Eddy; take the Oregon Portage Railroad to Celilo; take another steamboat from Celilo to Kettle Falls, walk around Kettle Falls; take another steamboat from Kettle Falls to Revelstoke and make, cross the Selkirk Mountains to Golden, and on by steamboat to Lake Windermere, the head of navigation on the Columbia River. This trip will require only three different steamboats from Fort Stevens to Revelstoke.

If this trip be made, arrangements must be completed for the steamboat to start from Fort Stevens not later than August 10, haste being necessary to get the steamer up and back over Priest and Rock Island rapids before the river falls below an eight-foot stage at Pasco.

I ran steamboats up and down the river from the ocean to Okanogan River, except over The Dalles and Celilo falls, and will gladly assist the captains and pilots on the river and the promoters in perfecting the details for the trip, if they so wish.

The time consumed on the trip indicated will be about 48 hours, night and day run; Fort Stevens to Priest Rapids, including stops, 18 hours; running and lining over Priest and Rock Island rapids to Wenatchee; 18 hours; Wenatchee to Bridgeport; two days; Bridgeport to Kettle Falls; 18 hours; Kettle Falls to Revelstoke.

I believe that the full inspection capacity of the different steamboats can be taxed to the utmost by people along the Columbia River who will pay good prices to ride short distances on the first steamboats to make this trip. It is well advertised, and if the Portland Chamber of Commerce will get busy the venture will be a success.
