New Millinery

—The variety of Hat shapes shown for Fall is diversified, but whether the shape be large, small or medium, it is almost always either a mushroom or other sort of brim coming over the face, and often indeed, when the hats are large, the upper part of the face is hidden from view.

—In dress hats the prevailing brim is of a turned-down, yet wavy, nature, coming to an inverted V over the face. These brims are ample all the way round, but particularly at the back, where liberal allowance is made for an abundance of hair. Some of these back parts of the brim look turtlelike, but when on a lady with plenty of hair to the back of her head, the oddness of the shape disappears.

—There are shapes whose rims are turned up at the left side.

—The large shapes are an inch or two wider in brim than last Season and some of the widest shapes have small low crowns. The crowns for picture hats generally are low, ranging from about two to four inches.

—The materials used in making pressed shapes are beaver, velvet, hatters' plush, fine satin, cashmere silk, felt and combinations of any of them.
