Second Appearance of Pavlowa and Mordkin Draws Murmurs of Delight--Gloom of Romantic Ballet Is Soon Relieved.

Brilliantly executed folk dances, mostly Pollsh and Russian, clever pan-tomime action, graceful posing, wedded to well-played and appropriate music, and one new romantic ballot, "Giselle," sum up the feast of noveliles present-ed vesterday afterneon and night to ed yesterday afternoon and night to audiences by the Imperial Russian Bal-let performing at the Baker Theater under the direction of Lois Steers-

The audiences were remarkable from The audiences were remarkable from the large number of Russian people who attended in honor of the two Russian ballet stars—Mademoiselle Anna Pavlowa, the danseuse etolic, and M. Mikali Mordkin, the premier danseur classique. Floral bouquets from Russian societies in this city were handed across the footlights to both Pavlowa and Mordkin.

and Mordkin.

At the matinee performance, the star attraction was the Oriental ballet from the Arabian nights, "The Legend of Azylade," which opened the bill last Friday night. The witchery and artistic abandon of the whole picture left the audience, largely representative of society circles, spell-bound. At the conclusion of "Azylade," there were delighted murmurs of "ohs" and "ahs" from women spectators. One little girl who had gazed with increasing wonder when Pavlowa whirled on her toes and kept whirling, said in a loud whisper, "Mother! Can you do that?"

STARS SHINE AGAIN

Was observed that the child looked with decreased respect at her mother during the rest of the afternoon.

There were other selections on the bill which were repetitions, but with the other noveltles, the general verdict seemed to be, judging from the wealth of appliause, that never has such artistic folk-dancing been seen, wedded to such really splendid orchestral music, in this city. The 'cello solo was played with fine tonal effect by M. Feinbloom in "The Swan," and the work of the leading violinist, M. Wolsky, formed the subject of admiring comment. The playing of the six musicians of the brass section in the orchestra was also uniformly good.

Romantic Ballet Is First.

"Giselle," a romantic ballet in two ects by Theophile Gautier, with music by Adolphe Adam, and staged and rearranged by M. Mordkin, opened the evening performance and, although a novelty, the first act—because so much is done in pantomime—has not much to commend it. In some respects it wearied, and the stage "agony" of Pavlowa, in the dying scene was needlessly prolonged. The second act is brighter, due to the introduction of the fairies, and Pavlowa's resurrection was remarkable for its sense of the spiritual. She is made to arise from her grave, at the command of the queen of the fairies, but it was a pity that the limelight showed the wire by which her ascension was helped. The story will satisfy the most romantio—even the gloomy Schumann—if he were alive now, would rave over it and probably compose a new dirge in its honor. So much tragedy has it that the text might as well have been written by Tolstol or Ibsen.

The other part of the programme was a welcome change, and the various offerings sparkied with brightness and dainty grace. The favorites were clearly the "Swan" dance of Pavlowa and the "Bacchanale" due by Pavlowa and Mordkin, but it would have been a better picture of artistry had there not been, in the "Swan" scene a long thread that persisted in clinging to Pavlowa's dainty skirt. The "Bacchanale" was interpreted with a swift abandon, a sort of "on with the dance for tomorrow we die" spirit, that was a revelation. The audience was very enthusiastic in the second part of the programme, but not so large as at the two previous performances.

Langendorff Concert Tuesday.

Great interest has been awakened in the Langendorff concert to be given at the Masonic Temple, Tuesday evening, under the auspices of the Association of Collegiate Alumnae and the Alumber of Portland people have heard Madame Langendorff sing either in New York or Vienna and they promise a rare treat. One woman who heard her in Vienna a few years ago, says that she is one of the most human, warm-hearted and soulful singers she has ever heard.

For Business Use

There are a great many places and occasions when the possibility of getting extra heat immediately effects an economy by decreasing the discomfort of the worker. In the office, in the early morning or late at night, before or after the steamheat is on, it is of importance to have extra heat. In the builder's outside office, in the shipping room, in the checker's shack, on exposed lofts, in railroad stations, in studios, the is often a necessity. It is safe, smokeless and odorless. Apply a match, and it gives heat quickly. With four quarts of oil it burns nine hours. Has automatic-locking flame spreader, which prevents the wick from being turned high enough to smoke, and is easy to remove and drop back so that the wick can be cleaned in an instant.

It has a cool handle and a damper top. An indicator always shows the amount of oil in the font. The filler-cap it is put in like a cork in a bottle, and is attached to the font by a chain.

The burner body or gallery cannot become wedged, because of a new device in construction, and consequently, it can always be easily unscrewed in an instant for rewicking. The Perfection Oil Heater is finished in Japan or nickel. It is strong, durable, well made, built for service, yet light and ornamental.
