EVERY SECTION OF GLOBE HAS OWN PECULIAR EASTERCUSTOMS

A Study of Them at This Time Is Full of Interest. Many Are of Great Antiquity. One of the Most Interesting and Ancient Is Ceremonies Connected With Kindling of the Holy Fire in Church of the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem. America as Well as Europe Has Her Own Ways of Celebrating Easter.

GREAT number of Interesting ceremonies are connected with the celebration of Easter, which in its religious significance constitutes the festival of the Resurrection, although Easter day is always the first Sunday after the pascal moon; that is, the full moon which happens upon, next after, March 21, the beginning of the ecclesiastical year, and if the full moon happens on a Sunday, Easter day is the next Sunday after.

The baking of cakes is not unconnected with the Saxon goddess. Eastre, the festival which was annually kept about the same time as Easter. It has always been a time of rejoicing, both as a period when Lent was completed and as a ceremony symbolizing the coming of Spring.

The custom of the Easter egg perpetuates the idea of revival of life which the old ceremony symbolized. In Russia, red eggs are exchanged and caged birds are let loose. At one time. in England, the Easter egg was sol-emply bleased by the priest and if elaberately colored was often kept as an amulet. Imitation eggs made of silver, mother-of-pearl or bronze are made in Vienna for the Easter festival. Once a year, at Easter-time, Jeru-salem is invaded by thousands of Greek Church of the Holy Sepulchre in order to celebrate Easter. The most interest-ing ceremony is the descent of the warred fire from heaven. There are no in England, the Easter egg was solsacred fire from heaven. There are no lights visible in the great church, which is densely packed when the procession arrives, followed by the Greek and Armenian patriarchs who enter the sacred chapel. Presently a carillon of silver bells announces that the fire has fallen from heaven. Everyone rushes to light his candle at the sacred flame in the Chapel of the Angel. From candle to candle it is passed on until the church is illuminated from end to end. It is transmitted by a courier to the Grotto of Nativity at Bethlehem, another takes it to Jaffa--where a Russian boat is walting to convey the sa-cred fire to Odessa and then to the cathedrals of St. Petersburg and Moscow and the Imperial Chapel.

Qualnt Ceremony of Easter.

Easter is celebrated in a very quaint Easter is celebrated in a very quaint manner among the Moravians dwelling in the United States. On Good Friday, in the afternoon, is held a crucifixion service. This solumn feature is made more realistic by the tolling of the great bell in the by fry of the church three times at 3 o'clock, indicative of the hour at which Christ was crucified. About 2 o'clock on Easter Sunday About 2 o'clock on Easter Sunday morning the trombone choir starts out on a tour of the town. At each street arner quaint old German chorals are layed. The object is to awaken the copie and to inform them that it is to be on their way to attend the Resurrection services in the 64113

EASTER SATURAAT ROWER MARKET SOUTARE

The Moravian Church at Bethlehem Pa., at the time of its erection in 1803, was the largest church in America. The services are started by the trombone choir stationed in the belfry. They play several selections and then church serv-ices begin. These consist of songs and the reading of a brief litany and songs, and last half an hour. The remaining part of the service takes place in the cemetery, which adjoins the church. Probably the most interesting secu-iar cefebration of Easter in this coun-try is the annual egg-rolling of the children of Washington on the White-House lawn on Easter Monday. The parade of fashionable New York-ers on Fifth avenue on Easter Sunday is also the street flower markets in the squares of New York on the Saturday before Easter Sunday.

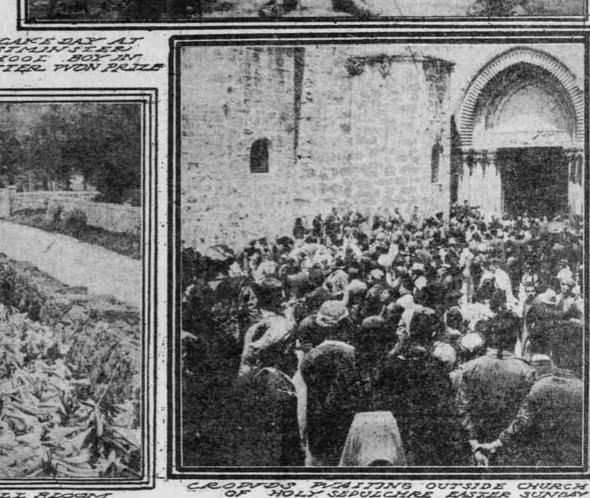

"Tossing the Pancake."

In England one of the most ancient Lenten customs which still survive is is the "tossing of the pancake" on shrove Tuesday. This takes place at Westminater Scheel, London, in the presence of the number of scholars, parents and friends. A prize of a guinea is awarded the scholar who se-cures either the whole of or the largest portion of the pancake when it is thrown over a bar by the school cook. This year it was won by George Furs-don, aged 17. In Rome, Easter is celebrated with imposing pomp in which his Holiness, the Pope, participates, although not as conspicuously or with as much mag-nificence as when in the full enjoyment of his temporal power.

Mass in St. Peter's is celebrated with great formality by the cardinal arch-priest, but at $ o'clock on Easter Sun-mass in the chapel of the consistory in a costume of full dress is prescribed in the dress for the women. Eggs also play an important part in masters on the eve of the ceremony.

(Copyright, 1908, by the Shortstory Pub-liating Company, Copyright secured in Great Britain. All rights reserved.) BY ANNA M'CLURE SHOLL.

the smoking-room of a liner fou men were carrying on one of those anecdotal conversations which seem born of the idle life on shipboard. A little distance from the group sat a man who listened intently to all that was being said, but without comment. He had a long, narrow face, restless blue eyes and features which made it difficult to deterine whether the dominant qualities of his nature were good or evil.

Someone had just told a story of a certain general's action in the face of imminent death, and in the pause that followed, the fat, jovial man, who is nearly always in a smoking-room group, said with an air of reflection;

the last five minutes of my life had come. I've often wondered how I'd spend them."

"There would scarcely be time to draw up a will," the lawyer remarked.

"I'd write a few lines to the person I love bost." said the college senior, frankly. His engagement had just been an-

"I guess I'd make up any quarrel I had on hand," said the stout man, who did not look as if he could hear malice over dense, clinging fog. night

The fourth member of the group had remained silent. He was watching the varying expressions which passed over the face of the listening stranger, like a running comment on the conversation. The collegian recalled his attention.

'Hartley, how would you employ 'the last five minutes?"

Richard Hartley paused a moment before answering. All eyes were turned towards him expectantly, as if anything he said would carry weight with his audimce. He, himself, was chiefly conscious of the stranger in the corner, who appeared to be growing uneasy under the continued discussion of the subject. "How would I employ them? I think I'd confees my sins, and ask heaven to lave mercy on my soul."

He spoke with an bonest fervency, which closed the subject, as if the last word had been said. After a moment's glience someone introduced a new topic.

Later in the day, Hartley was ap proached by the stranger of the smokng-room, who had been conspicuous during the voyage for his reserved and somewhat ungracious manners. After an xchange of commonplaces, under which Hartley velled his surprise at these advances and the stranger the real object of them, the latter said:

"I was not a little interested in your answer to the question under discussion sonal remark, it did not accord with yo appearance."

triumphantly happy and easy in your | Hartley, after assisting some women to mind, as if your conscience were as clear as crystal. I was attracted to you first by that very quality in your manner."

"I am certainly of a cheerful nature," and more from the berg, with strange Hartley assented, somewhat embarrassed and dreadful noises of breaking timber by this analysis of himself on the part and rushing, pounding water, just visible of a perfect stranger: "And I've no as a gray swirl, through the still deeper great crimes on my conscience," he grayness of the fog. added, laughing.

Knowing that the boat carried a large His companion turned his head sharply steerage for an outwardbound voyage. away and gazed out to sea. After and remembering the preponderance moment's silence Hartley said: women on board, Hartley realized that fact. He was face to face at last with They exchanged cards. The stranger's the most common yet the strangest of bore the name "Henry Penn Gilman." No all destinies. address was on it. For a moment panic swept over him.

"May I ask whom I have the honor of addressing T

This somewhat singular interview was He had an impulse to fight his way to one of those overcrowded boats now the beginning of a shipboard acquaintance which was actively pursued by the about to swing into the horrible gulf. "Two often wondered, as I suppose we older man, and passively accepted by all have, what I'd do if I were told that | Hartley, who was not able to rid himself Then his manhood reasserted itself. He could at least die like a man. He of a certain repugnance and distrust bowed his head in silent prayer. which the shifty eyes and hard mouth of At that moment Henry Gliman ap-Gilman inspired in him. Yet he felt a proached kind of pity for the man who seemed drawn. "There's no hope," he said hoarsely. shut away by himself in a bleak loneli-

"I've just seen the steerage. It's like niche. The voyage continued uneventful until hell." the fifth day out. Then heavy seas were Hartley made no answer encountered, and a storm of wind which a crash like the collapse of a house, ac-followed the roar, and then a pande-montum of shouts and cries as the pas rush for the door and the upper his muscles to keep his mind cool.

struggling, screaming, throng.

and sharp above the hideous uproar.

"I'll shoot the first man who attempts

In a glance his eye took in the altua-

"The ship will be off the berg in anwas finally hushed and blanketed in a other five minutes," he went on. "We're up against the last scene." On the evening of the sixth day, while Hartley was silent. dinner was being served, and while the "I've something on my mind," the usual jeremiades called forth by the man said, with a hurried, feverish weather were dampening the spirits of emphasis. "I've got to tell someone bethe less hopeful passengers, there came fore I die. There's no priest on board. May I tell you?"

him, his face white and Hartley nodded, but there was companied by a hideous, tearing, splitting sound, as if some giant were making strange indifference in his manner. He fire-wood of the ship. An awful slience had the air of a man already passing beyond the affairs and interests of sengers, unheeding the commands of the "This is what I must tell before captain and the officers, made a mad deck. Hartley, who had sprung to his feet with the others, got out of the way of the dangerous onward sweep of the panicable processes, I swindled him out of stricken throng and, when the dininghis entire fortune, a hundred thousand room was emptied, proceeded leisurely to dollars. He died a ruined man a year the deck, endeavoring by the control of later, worn out with his troubles, for which I was wholly responsible. I am, in the sight of heaven, a thief and a murderer. If I live, I will make restitution to his daughter. If I die, the Lord have mercy on my soul!"

humbly. "You have judged me, because you are an honest man. . . . Gread God! Is the ship going down?"

of their strangeness now made further speech impossible. The two men, drawing their life-preservers more tightly the morning. If you will pardon a per-to get into a boat before the women and to get into a boat before the women and to get into a boat before the women and to get into a boat before the women and to get into a boat before the women and to get into a boat before the women and the cause of her father's troubles. His interest in her, as the daughter of the man whom Gliman had wronged, gave place, after a time, to a deeper, more personal feeling The friend be-taide of the ship they joined there a throng of ghastly-looking men, now "No, that's just the point. You look about them, looked around for some de-tached object to which they might cling. One thought was in the minds of both, to get clear of the horrible wailing child, who had missed its mother, caught at Hartley's hand. He lifted it to his shoulder, looking down find places for themselves and their children, withdrew from the throng and with a shudder at the seething water. Who could live in such a sea! At that moment there was a cry from made his way towards the impaled bow, which every moment was loosing more

At that moment there was a try home the bridge. The captain who had been standing motionless as an image, was now leaning over the rail, straining his eyes into the fog which, as if in a mirage of paradise, suddenly lifted in the neighborhood of the ship, reveal-ing the close provinity of another huse ing the close proximity of another huge

Two years later Richard Hartley landed in his native country for the the capitain's "If" was a cold, stark landed in his native country for the first time since that outward-bound voyage which seemed more like a fan-tastic dream than a real occurrence. When Henry Gilman had reached the deck of the rescuing steamer he had gone immediately below, nor did he emerge from his cabin until the vessel was docked in the English port. In the hustle of landing he had avoided Hart-ley, who, divining that the man's confession was now a source of embarra ment to him, made no effort to speak to him again.

During his two years abroad he had often wondered whether the the creation of a brain temporarily dis-ordered by fright or whether the man had really rid his conscience of an intolerable load. Hartley resolved that on his return home he would go to Tetronville, and investigate the truth of the story The little Ohio town seemed too small

The little Ohlo town seemed too small to harbor secrets. He called on the clergyman who had been longest in residence there, and from him learned that seven years before John Benedict, once a weafthy man, had died in pov-erty, leaving a daughter, Margaret, 12 years old, who still lived in the town. By dint of skilful questioning, Hartley, withous revealing what he himself knew, managed to extract the informaknew, managed to extract the informa-tion that Benedict's misfortunes were never attributed to anything but his own ill-luck or possible mismanage-ment. He also learned that Margaret "This is what I must tell before I go to my account: "Six years ago I was the business partner of a man named John Benedict, in the town of Tetronville, Ohio. By silent, untrace-able processes, I swindled him out of stayed on in the place, and at last met the young girl, who had become a ro-mantic figure to him. She was of a delicate and spiritual type of beauty, with an air of seriousness about her which indicated a maturity of thought and feeling beyond her years. Hartley asked himself whether it would be adwishie'to reveal to her a piece of knowledge which might only serve to trouble and unsettle her- knowledge of which no advantage could be taken, since it had been obtained, as it were, under the seal of the confessional.

His acquaintaince with her pro-gressed rapidly under the double at-traction of her charm and of the un-conscious part she had played in the drama of the shipwreck. He wondered how much or how little she knew of the cause of her father's troubles.

had missed its She listened with profound astonish-fartley's hand. He ment. When he had finished she said: "But the name of my father's partsaid ner was Charles Henderson.

"Did you ever see him?" "I remember him perfectly."

"Describe him to me." "He had a long, narrow face, blue eyes, set close together, and a rather nervous manner. He had the trick of giving a little cough in the middle of a sentence." "it's the same man," Hartley said. "Did your father ever speak in your presence of distrusting Henderson?"

"Not directly. Once, shortly before his death, he said to me that he was devil was sick, the devil a monk would

After his marriage Richard Hartley took his wife to New York. Although the incident of the shipwreck was now very little in his thoughts, he would find himself at times scanning the hur-rying throng on Broadway for the face of the man whom he had last seen under such dramatic circumstances. After the lapse of five years events occurred which made the minds of both husband and wife turn towards Henry Gilman. Through the collapse of a corporation, Hartley, a comparatively rich man lost his entire fortune. Margaret, who had known poverty during the impressionable years of her girlhood, faced cheerfully the necessity girlhood, faced cheerfully the necessity of beginning life anew, but her husband was for a time cast down and embittered. His thoughts began to dwell on Gilman and Gilman's debt to his wife. He lived over again in ima-

He heard the strange theatening noises, he saw the helpless passengers running about like rats in a cage-and against this background of terror he saw a face white with the terror of conscience

He longed to employ means to track Gilman, but Margaret's influence prevented him. She seemed content to wait for whatever tardy judgment of her cause time held in store. Hartley acknowledged at last that she was right, and giving up the thought of this possible short cut to fortune he devoted his energies to making a new path for himself. They moved to a Southern town, where he obtained a

After a year whose hardships brought to the surface again the memory of Gilman, Hartley went on a memory went on a memory of Gilman, Hartley went on a memory we commercial trip to a city some ninety miles distant, taking Margaret with Gilman bowed his head. "It is the him for a change of scene and ar.

Walking on a side street near the courthouse, a day or two after their arrival, they saw just ahead of them a man, the outlines of whose figure seemed to Hartley vaguely familiar. He was searching his memory for some enlightening recollection, when the man, overtaking another, detained him in conversation. As he did so, his own full face was revealed.

Hartley grasped his wife's arm: "It's Gilman!

The color left Margaret's face. "Yes-it's my father's partner," she Gilman-for it was he-shook hands | we will accept the odd eighty thousand with the man he had accosted, and in Heu of interest!" hesitated, then, with an odd Glima look of mingled renunciation and relief.

"Gray, you're just the man I want-I he said: was on my way to your office. My daugh-"Come up, and you shall see me sign ter is to be married this afternoon. So that afternoon, when Miss Gilman "Did you have a daughter?" Hartley became Mrs. Winthrop, her "dot" was only half as large as it might have been, but the young couple were none the whispered. "Yes-but she lived with her mother You remember I told you he was sepa-rated from his wife."

"Yes-hush!" From his pocket he drew a card and hastily wrote:

"The last five minutes."

Just as Gilman was about to follow his companion into a doorway lined with lawyers' signs. Hartley laid a detaining hand upon his shoulder and silently held the card before his eyes. Gilman looked at it, turned it over and read the owner's name; then a ghastly grayness over spread his face. "You are Charles Henderson." Hartley

St. Paul Pioneer Press. A rural resident from one of the said in a low tone. "This is my wife. She is the daughter of the man you neighboring townships who came into the city the other day related an anec-dote of his home viliage, where the wronged; it was to her that you prom-lsed restitution, should you be saved from imminent death. That yow has evibenefits of rural free delivery have not yet been extended, and the country postoffice is still the center of activity

Howe?

wiser.

But when Margaret Hartley, going up to the bride, put her arms about her and kissed her, and the father, who had given er in marriage turned upon Mrs. Hart ley a look which a soul might wear on entering paradise-a look of gratitude so exalted that it stamped his features with a poblity never before seen there-Rich-

No Mail for Cows.

window, and the following con-

"Have you got any letter for Mike

"For whom?" he snapped. "For Mike Howe," replied the rustic, The Postmaster spat in a cynical

"Don't quite understand you," he re-

"Neither have I any mull for any-lowe?" he inquired. The Postmaster looked him over.

ard Harriey was well content.

dently escaped your mind." Gliman made an imploring gesture, and looked furtively over his shoulder at the lawyer who was slowly ascending the about the time the mail comes I One day, the story teller relates, he was sitting behind the old-fashioned stove, when he happened to notice a stairs. "For God's sake!" he whispered hoarseburly farmer, who stepped to the dely, "don't disgrace me now! My daugh-ter is about to be married to a man of one of the oldest families here. He would-" versation ensued:

Hartley interrupted him:

"Better he should know, than marry the daughter of a-" He broke off, and added after a moment's reflection: "Will you keep your solemn vow-late as it is? Will you make restitution?" Lines of acute suffering deepened in manner.

Gliman's face. "For heaven's sake," he cried. "hav turned peevishly. "Don't understand!" bellowed the mercy! When I landed in England I meant to do everything I had vowed to do, but I was met by the news that rural resident. "Can't ye understand plain English? I asked if you had any mall for Mike Howe." "No, I haven't," snarled the Postmasmy wife, from whom I was separated, had died in Paris, where my little daugh-ter, whom I had not seen for six years, ter.

body else's cow!' was awaiting me. I found a lovely, lonely child of 12, and my ambition at once awoke again, for her sake. Though I often thought of my vow, though my conscience reproached me. I could not "Manufacturing" Sentiment.

National Magazine Long lists of signed petitions are now looked upon as rather unreliable evi-dence, since no sooner has one side sent in a petition carrying signatures of 'sovereign voters' than the opposition comes back with a list equally as for-conscience reproteined inc. I could not bring myself to give up what I now re-garded as her fortune. Now she is to marry the man she loves." Margaret's eyes softened, and she ap-peared about to speak, but Hartley, re-straining her, continued, in an unrelent-tive tone. midable. It is said in some instances that the same people have signed oppos-ing papers, showing that they have not

'What of another child, just the age

justice of heaven," he said wearly.

They stopped short in their walk.

was just now going up these stairs to dictate a deed insuring my daughter her dowry. But now-" "Wait!" exclaimed Hartley. "How large has the fortune grown from the hundred thousand which you-took?"

"I have now about $30,000, which I meant to give my daughter." "Um-m! Highty thousand for interest."

Hartley mused.

of my wifel . . . What I said was that and vigorous

Father of Sixteen Children. Chicago dispatch to Philadelphia Record Should the sovereign state of Illinois lecide to pay bounty for large families and call the roll of its citizens, Michael Fox, of 7810 Chauncey avenue, will be able to answer "present." Mr. Fox, who is a switchman on the Illinois Central Hartley mused. "What is that!" exclaimed Gilman. "Dictate to your lawyer two deeds of slit-each for $$$0,000-one in favor of slit-each for $$$0,000-one in favor of slite the other in the name father of 16, and they are all strong Railroad, never received any congratgiven very close attention to the prayer of the petition. In fact, it is claimed ousiness is to "manufacture" public sen-

that there are organizations

iment.

tion. The ship, in collision with an ice berg and partly impaled on its flagged sides, was safe only for the few m ments before the torn and twisted tim "I can't be your judge," Hartley said, bers should be loosened from the ice fange by the tumbling of the waves.

The captain, who had taken his place on the bridge, had ordered the lifeboats lowered. Surrounding them now was a Sounds all the more terrible because Suddenly a pistol shot sounded clear