ALASKAN COAL PROBLEM GROWS

Big Mass Meeting Monday at Seattle Promises to Be "Rouser."

WIDE EFFECT IS DESIRED

Main Object of Plan's Promoters Is to Emphasize Attitude Toward Patenting of Claims in Far Northern Possession.

SEATTLE, Wash., May 20.—(Special.)—Seattle's mass meeting May 22 on the question of Alaskan coal promises to be a big affair. It has been endorsed by the joint committee of several commercial organizations, all of which are determined to make the meeting a "rouser."

On this point the Rotary Club has adopted a report reciting the troubles in Alaska and saying that the object will be to let the people of the United States understand the attitude of Seattle toward the development of Alaskan coal, and in that way to emphasize the necessity of the government issuing patents to coal claimants against whom no charges have been filed.

"The mass meeting," says the report, "is not planned to influence the decision of courts upon coal filings now in controversy, but to hasten action on claims against which no contest has been made and so make available for development sufficient coal to meet the needs of the people of Alaska; that their progress and prosperity may be retarded no longer."

Greatly to the relief of transportation men engaged in the Alaska trade, the Marine Hospital Service has modified its vaccination order so that passengers who believe they have not been exposed to smallpox will be allowed to make affidavit as follows: "I hereby swear that I intend to embark for a port in Alaska, and to my best knowledge and belief I have not been exposed to smallpox during the past 14 days; and that I have truthfully answered the questions asked me as to my whereabouts during the past two weeks."

On this showing the passenger will be given a certificate. The modified order will greatly reduce the number of vaccinations, which for a time threatened to deprive Seattle of its most profitable summer excursion trade.

Tideland Holders Fear.

There is something akin to consternation among the owners of preferences to second-class tidelands by the discovery that they have only 18 days left in which to exercise their rights. Unless they act before June 7, when reference to lands between mean low and extreme low tides, the lands may be sold as any other tidelands, to whom ever may apply for their purchase.

Owners of extra-tideland property complain that the state is forcing them to take all the risk in demanding a release of all claims in event the courts hold that the state has no right to sell. Dissatisfaction and acrimony are noticeable among some owners, who claim that they have learned only through accident of the danger to their property.

They assert that they have had no notice of the bill, and that the bill, originally introduced by J. A. Miller, carried an emergency clause and the 90-day interval of preference right will expire before the law is printed; and that a way is opened for blackmail by unscrupulous speculators.

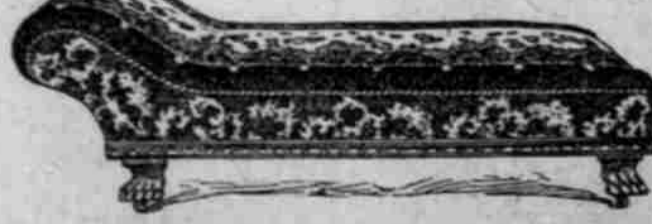

The bill as drafted gave title outright to owners of the lands in question on the basis that previous Legislatures undoubtedly intended to convey as tidelands the lands over which the tide ebb and flow. But the bill was amended so as to give tideland owners a preference right to buy at $1 per lineal chain the extra tidelands, this right to be exercised in preference in the open market.

The sweeping effect of the law appears in the fact that it will force thousands of owners of summer homes on Puget and Willapa bays to either exercise their rights or take the consequences. Each of them must buy the extra tidelands at once, or be liable to be placed in competition with speculators in the open market. The holder of extra tidelands could seriously interfere with a property owner by forcing him to pay for the privilege of getting to and from his summer home.

Seattle Will Have Weed Day. Saturday, May 27, is to be celebrated as Seattle's "weed day," at which time all citizens are urged to make war on thistles, burdocks and similar plants. At the same time an effort will be made to clear rubbish from alleys. The campaign against weeds started with the Western Federation of Improvement Clubs at its meeting in Tacoma last August, and Seattle is trying to make its observance general. To that end Governor M. E. Hay has been asked to set aside May 27 as a legal holiday and to invite the co-operation of the boy scouts and all school children in the destruction of weeds. Locally, the improvement clubs are calling attention to ordinance 5677 providing a penalty for leaving refuse in streets or alleys and the clubs request citizens to report any growth of weeds on parking strips. H. L. Sizer, author of the resolution adopted by the improvement clubs, says: "A general onslaught is required. We hope every man in this city will assign to himself a part of this work, and perform it quickly and thoroughly. There will be a second weed day, for such weeds as start again and run to seed."

Electricians Near Death. A curious story comes from Bremerton of two expert battleship repair men being accidentally imprisoned on the Colorado, and escaping death by chance. They were Dan Sachem, electrician, and M. J. Hoyt, a helper. They had been sent to repair a wire conduit in the magazine and lost their way in the winding compartments. A door through which they had entered had been closed and in their search for another door they became so confused that they could not tell one part of the ship from another. They then tried to drill their way out. They were ready to give up when the point of a drill cut into a telephone cable, breaking the connection. This fortunate accident started an inquiry which resulted in finding the two men exhausted and near death far down in the ammunition and powder holds.
