JUNE 18, 1911—The earthquake crisis—the holocaust visited by the tremors of half a minute—brought the utmost fear among the inhabitants of San Francisco yesterday. The fear was felt throughout the city but was most intense in the districts where the principal damage occurred, and in the areas of the main business section. It was felt with equal force by the residents of the other districts, but the effect was less evident. The fear was not confined to the city itself, but extended to the surrounding territory.

The earthquake was felt in a number of counties surrounding San Francisco, including Contra Costa, Alameda, and Santa Clara. The tremors were felt as far as the city of Oakland, which is located about 20 miles north of San Francisco.

The earthquake was the greatest ever to strike the San Francisco area, and it was estimated to have energy equal to that of a forty-eight-inch earthquake.
