

ANTI-VOTE TALKER IS HOLY ASSAILED

Remarks of Miss I. T. Martin Branded as "Untrue, Damnable and Insulting."

EQUALITY CLUB IS STIRRED

"Effect of New York Woman's Misstatements Immoral," Declares Mrs. Emma B. Carroll, in Denouncing Address.

Miss I. T. Martin, anti-suffrage speaker, was the center of attack at a meeting of the Woman's Political Equality League in the Olds, Wortman & King Auditorium yesterday afternoon. It was said that by insinuation and by untruthfulness she has put the leading suffrage workers and the suffragists themselves in an improper light, and what was purported to be the true version of her abrupt closing of a meeting last week was given by parties who were present.

W. D. Wheelwright, who, it is said, joined the forces of the anti-suffragists after he had declared himself publicly in favor of the suffrage, was referred to sarcastically and with ridicule. The meeting was presided over by Mrs. M. L. T. Hadden, president of the league.

The subject of Miss Martin was brought in for general discussion by Mrs. Sarah A. Evans, who arose to comment on an address by Mrs. Emma B. Carroll, who spoke on "The Immoral Effects of Mrs. Martin's Misstatements." Mrs. Evans said that at a meeting of the Woman's Club she had facetiously remarked that the anti-suffragists should be extended a vote of thanks for bringing Miss Martin here, but that although Miss Martin had done the suffrage cause some good, she felt that some impressions she gave out were really pernicious.

Entrusts Are Charged. "Some of her insinuations were most damnable and absolutely untruthful in argument," she said. After characterizing as cowardly Miss Martin's manner of breaking up her meeting last week, she said that when questions began to fly, some friend at the door held up a watch as a signal that it was time to get out, and that Miss Martin's plea that she had been invited to the meeting was a "church member."

The speaker said that the question regarding prohibition was asked after Miss Martin had persisted in representing the suffragists as being backed by the liquor interests. Miss Martin had implied that she was a prohibitionist.

When Dr. M. L. T. Hadden attempted to defend Miss Martin on the ground that she had a right to express her opinions, Mrs. Frederick Bergert replied by saying: "A woman has a right to do as she chooses as long as she chooses to do right. But no woman has a right to be dishonest."

Mrs. Evans grew sarcastic in her reference to the methods of the anti-suffragists, and their refusal to meet the suffragists on equal ground, and particularly to Miss Martin's refusal to answer questions. "She had been respectfully challenged," she said, "but declined the invitation."

Remarks Insulting Says Mrs. Clark. "Never again will I sit in a meeting where such insulting and reproachful remarks are directed at motherhood," said Mrs. A. E. Clark. "There was more derogatory to woman implied in the remarks of that old man, Wheelwright, than I have ever before sat and listened to."

It was charged that Miss Martin had perverted the utterances of John Adams, Judge Lindsey and other prominent suffrage leaders of the country, and telegrams were read from several of those quoted by Miss Martin, secured within 24 hours of her utterances, in which they repudiated what Miss Martin had quoted them as saying.

Mrs. Carroll, who gave the principal address, and has stenographic copy of all of Miss Martin's speeches, dissected the statements of the anti-suffragists purporting to show how they were untrue, and how, in many cases, her assertions were untrue.

Roosevelt is Quoted. "The local anti's," said Mrs. Carroll, "said that we don't have to talk to these women. So I imported Miss Martin from New York and asked us to listen to her as their representative. Is any woman from New York a better authority on the subject of suffrage than women who have lived under the practical, actual workings of suffrage? Colonel Roosevelt has declared that 'New York stands at the tail end of the whole United States in the movement of dealing with juvenile delinquency in a progressive manner.' Can such a state be held up as a model for Portland to pattern after?"

PORTLAND ACADEMY ALUMNI TO HOLD CO-ED BANQUET AND REUNION MAY 29

200 Expected at Meeting. When Former Students and Graduates Will Take Steps to Strengthen Organization and Co-operate With Faculty and Officers of School—Programme of Speeches Planned.

Portland Academy

The alumni of the Portland Academy are planning to hold a reunion dinner in the city on May 29, at which it is expected that 150 or 200 of the alumni will be present. The alumni of the academy now number 450 and nearly 500 of these live in this city. Those who are instrumental in arranging the dinner are convinced that a large interest will be taken in the reunion, not alone because the members of various classes will be interested in meeting their classmates, but also to show their co-operation in the movement which this meeting is intended to inaugurate. The plan of the alumni is to strengthen their organization and to co-operate with the officers and faculty in any way that will best serve the interests of the academy and the community.

The influence of the academy has been a considerable factor in the development of the community. Many of the alumni of this school now hold high rank in business and professions in Portland. It is a significant fact that these alumni, both men and women (for it is a co-educational school) are looking back to their old school and planning to get together so that their influence and prestige may be focused through their organization in such a manner as to strengthen the already strong position which is held by this school.
