The lights are out,

The forty-eighth annual National conention of the Elks is at an end. The festivities, the galety, the fun, and the good fellowship that have reigned here for the last six days are over. Portland now will revert to its normal everyday life. At midnight the splendid illumination of the court of honor was darkened. A curtain was drawn over the electric display on the big buildings in the business district. The gay revellers who crowded the streets until the beginning of another week went to their homes feeling that perhaps it would be many years before they would see another celebration such as this.

Those members of the Elks official family who remained in the city until the end expressed regret with the people of Portland that the festivities could not continue longer. None among them could or would deny that this re-union and its festivities surpassed all that have gone before.

Hospitality Is Praised.

Hospitality is Praised. It will be a long time, they say, until another city in another year, gives to the Elks such a wonderful entertain-ment and such a splendid manifestation of hospitality as that presented here this week by the people of Portland. While they give to the Portland Elks and to the Elks of the Northwest the credit for bringing them here and for conducting their era of enjoyment, they conducting their era of enjoyment, they are not backward in singing the praises 43d anniversary of her marriage to of all the citizens of Portland and the David M. Littlefield, a veteran of the state, whether they are members of the order or not, for joining with the Elks in making this the successful and happy of the Order or not of the successful and happy occasion that it was. Judging from crowds on the streets last night the whole city turned out to bring the convention week to a happy close in a blaze of light and a clatter of in horns cowbells and other noise-making devices. The streets were almost a solid mass of people enjoy-ing in the extreme the feast of pic-turesque beauty formed by the myriad of lights. Portland probably has never hefore seen such crowds as moved up and down the streets forming the court

The visitors from Montana began to iseve Friday for Seattle, Tacoma and other cities. Many will make exten-sive trips before returning home. W. R.
