OREGON COLLEGE HEADS DO MUCH FOR EDUCATION

Presidents of Four Institutions in State Have, Through Their Efforts Past Four Years, Raised Plane of Schools.

Dr. P. L. Campbell, President University of Oregon.	Dr. W. J. Kerr, Pres. Oregon Agricultural College.
Dr. Fletcher Homan, Pres. Willamette University.	Dr. Herbert Miller, Pres. North Pacific College of Dentistry and Pharmacy.

AMONG the men who have loomed large in the later educational growth of Oregon's colleges are Dr. W. J. Kerr, president of the Oregon Agricultural College; P. L. Campbell, president of the University of Oregon; Dr. Fletcher Homan, of Willamette University, and Dr. Herbert C. Miller, dean of the North Pacific College of Dentistry and Pharmacy.

All of these schools have made unprecedented growth within the past five or six years, under the administration of the men who now are at their heads.

The Oregon Agricultural College, besides expanding upon its own campus, until it has become one of the largest and best equipped schools of its kind in the United States, has, under Dr. Kerr, extended its work until it has been brought in close touch with the entire people of the state. The college extension work has been carried on through correspondence courses, short courses, demonstration farms, The college followed by Dr. Kerr on templates still further development of this department of the work, until the Oregon Agricultural College will serve not only the students upon its own campus, but will act as an important advisory agent to the people at large over the state and as a ready assistant to the immigrants who are pouring in and settling upon the farm lands of Oregon.

Parallel to the growth of the Oregon Agricultural College has been that of the State University, which has followed an extension policy of a similar nature, although adapted to the educational sphere in which the college has its strength.

Under Dr. Homan, the endowment fund of Willamette University has been enormously increased, extensive building operations have been carried on upon the campus, and Willamette University has been raised to a position among the institutions of first class in the Northwest.

Within the past year the North Pacific College, at whose head is Dr. Miller, has changed from its old quarters into a new and modern equipped building. The completeness of its courses offered and the excellence of its equipment for experimental and clinical work have lifted it to an equal rank with the best institutions of its kind in the United States and has attracted to Portland among its roll of students representatives from countries in all parts of the world.

OREGON'S LAW SCHOOL OFFERS ADVANTAGES

Its Location in Portland Gives Students Opportunity to Visit Federal, District, County and Municipal Courts.

THE Law Department of the University of Oregon, which like the medical college, is situated in Portland, is in a surrounding especially adapted to effective work. The District and Circuit courts of the United States, four departments of the State Circuit Court for the Fourth Judicial District, the County Court of Multnomah County and the Municipal and Justice Courts are in continual session, affording an exceptional opportunity for the students to study the methods of court procedure at first hand. It also places at their disposal library facilities that could not be equaled in any other section of the state.

Another advantage is the opportunities that are offered for law students to enter the offices of attorneys practicing in the city and carry on practical work in conjunction with their studies in the College of Law.

In the faculty of the Law School are a score of the leading lawyers of the State, each a recognized authority on the subject upon which he is engaged to lecture. The method of instruction is advantageous, for it is so arranged that the lectures are given in the evening, making it possible for students who are self-supporting to spend the day at their work without its interfering with the progress of the legal education.

The student body of the Law School was formally organized last Fall and affiliated with the student body of the University of Oregon in Eugene, and the Law School is well represented in the student publications and activities of the main institution in the latter city. The establishment of a moot court and the inauguration of a system of debating contests are two valuable additions that have been made within the past year.

The three years' course now in effect places the Oregon Law School on a footing nearly equal with that of the large Eastern law schools, and the success of the graduates of the Oregon institution, many of whom since graduation have found up strong practices in different cities of the Northwest, gives the college a ranking second to no other school of its kind on the Pacific Coast.

PORTLAND IS SEAT OF U. OF O. MEDICAL COLLEGE

Advantages of Proximity to Metropolitan Hospitals With Thousands of Patients Are Apparent.

BECAUSE Portland is the most populous center in the State of Oregon and affords therefore the best facilities for medical education, it was chosen as the seat of the Medical Department of the University of Oregon.

The medical college was chartered by the regents of the university in 1887 and has graduated classes regularly each year up to the present time. The advantages of the location in Portland are apparent when one contemplates the metropolitan hospitals, which have a capacity of upwards of 1000 beds. Patients from all parts of the Northwest are brought into Portland, whose needs, whether surgical or medical, receive attention at the hands of the various hospital staffs or by visiting surgeons or physicians, while the great manufacturing concerns, that center about Portland, of necessity give rise to many emergency cases. The opportunities afforded by these circumstances for clinical study are not to be equaled in any other section of the state, and it is for this reason that the medical college has been placed here. The last Legislature appropriated $30,000 to be devoted exclusively to equipment and maintenance of modern laboratories for the various departments of the college, and four full time professors have been added to the faculty. Two more will be added this year.

Dr. K. A. J. Mackenzie has succeeded to the management of the institution following Dr. S. E. Joseph, the Dean who resigned only a short time ago. Dr. Mackenzie recently visited Europe and spent much time studying the methods of medical instruction abroad, and his findings will be applied in the management of the courses of the Oregon Medical College.
