GARDENERS OF PAST AND PRESENT DIFFER IN METHODS OF WORKING

Grandmothers Planned Plower Plots to Last During Their Lives-Modern Women Prepare Plants for Short Season and Replace Them From Time to Time With New Ones.

ing to a day that is gone. But the real difference in the gardens of our grandmothers and the gurdens of today is a difference in the spirit of grandmother's time and of The women of the older generation made their gardens as they wove the linen for their brides' chests last for all their lives and to be handed down to their children. There is nothing the modern woman so much lacks us a spirit of doing things that are to be permanent. She is restless, hurried. unsettled, lacking wholly that polse that comes from calmly accepting one's work in the world and facing it capably and cheerfully. Toe city woman of today very likely calls up a florist over the telephone and orders plants already in bloom, perhaps, set out in the beds In her yard, and in a month or so she orders them taken out and replaced by others with which she is equally unacquainted. The grandmother that made the kind of garden we all cherish our memories knew and loved each individual plant. Difference in Gardeners.

So, after all, the difference is in the gardener, not the garden. We plant for a Summer, they made their gardens for the pleasure of a generation. So far as the materials for making the kind of garden that flourished a generation ago are concerned, we of to-day have all that the older gardeners Almost all of had and much more. the old-fashioned favorites have been much that with the sar attention and care our grandmothers gave them we could far surpass the old gardens.

So if there be any left among us with the patience, the gentleness and withal the serene belief in the permanence of their work that characterized those gracious dames of 50 years ago, these may have even lovelier gardens than their grandmothers. But like the in February until the end of the chrysteractor for four-leaf clovers:

Flowers and used flowers, forget-me-nots and the bleeding hearts that seem to belong in every old-fashioned garden, should find a place.

Lavender should, of course, be grown for its sweet-scented flowers and its associations. Gaillardias, coreopsis, snapsheave, the proposition of the chrysteractor for four-leaf clovers:

SIOUX INDIAN DESIRES TO PAY WILSON VISIT

W. P. Campbell Recalls Former Junket of Hollow Horn Bear When He Criticised Conduct of Carlisle Indian School.

"Indian school.

"Indian education in 1883 was in a precarious condition," said Mr. Campbell yesterday. "We needed the support of the old Indians and on this visit of the Sioux chieftain depended to no little degree our future success in bringing more young Sioux the shops. That is behind the shops. That is bed." from the Dakotas.

Sioux Makes Address.

" 'Captain Pratt takes us and shows and killing them.'

CHIEF Hollow Horn Bear, the Sioux Indian who has expressed a desire to visit the National Capital for the inauguration to give a pipe of peace to Woodrow Wilson, is a professional junketer. The big redskin has made several trips to Washintgon as an emissary of his tribe, and always he has had a first class reason for making the trip East.

Hollow Horn Bear's first trip into the heart of the white man's country was made in 1883 when the gigantic Sioux visited the Carlisie Indian School in Pennsylvania, where his son, Friend Hollow Horn Bear, was a pupil. An incident of the trip is described by W. P. Campbell of this city, who was then an official at the Indian school.

"Indian education in 1883 was in a "Then Hollow Horn Bear again finished and the Indian school."

"The interpreter had finished and Hollow Horn Bear began to rise before him. We all felt we had won an important battle and that henceforth the big tribal chieftain would aid us in our efforts to take education to the Indians—or rather to take the Indian to education.

"Then Hollow Horn Bear again finished and that henceforth the big tribal chieftain would aid us in our efforts to take education to the Indians—or rather to take the Indian to education.

"Then Hollow Horn Bear again finished and the property took the white man, learning to make was and clothing, and to show their horses. That is good. And Captain Pratt shows us the girls learning to bake, to cook the white man's food and to sew dresses after the manner of the white weam. That is good. "Hollow Horn Bear and his party had been at Carlisle for several days and Captain Pratt, the superintendent now General Pratt, had taken them all over the grounds and shown them the children at school and at work in the shops. The day before the party was to proceed to Washington from Carlisle Captain Pratt invited in the hall, was called on for a speech. "Hellow Horn Bear, sitting far back in the hall, was called on for a speech the arose, and, without going to the aisle, came forward by stepping over the rows of benches with gigantic strides, The employes were all more or less apprehensive as to what the strides. The employes were all more or less apprehensive as to what the solution should be supprehensive as to what the same asked my little boy where the solution of my friend is. He tells me: "Behind the shops." I asked him where is the little daughter of my medicine chief. He tells me: "Behind the shops." What the shop is the for 'good,' freely interspersed in the old warrior's speech.

"Hollow Horn Bear spoke for several minutes and then the interpreter took up the speech. It was all praise for Captain Prait, for the school and to the Great White Father who permitted such a school to be.

"He tells me: "Behind the shops." What can I tell my friend and my medicine chief when I go back to the reservation? Can I tell him education is good for the Iindans, but that it killed their children? No. I will hide my head and when I must, will tell them that we must yield to the rifles of the white men who are taking our children away and killing them."

"Captain Pratt takes us and shows up the boys and girls at work in the schoolrooms,' translated the interpreter. We see them learning to read and write like the white man. That is good. Captain Pratt then takes us to the dining-room and we see our children eating good food which the Great White Father provides. That is good. Captain Pratt takes us to the dormitories and shows us the nice, soft beds where the children slesp. That is good. He takes us to the shops and shows us the Indian boys learning the trades of the school at Carlisle. I saw the big chief many times thereafter and never found him willing to admit that we had helped any Indian by education."

Several charges made by the British to the relations of Labor and the Liberal party, were dealt with by the executive. The allegation that the Labor party is a Liberal-Labor party caucus of a wholly dependent character, says the report, is sufficiently disproved by the fact that the party is always guided in giving its votes in Parliament by the question that is before it.

it meets with the opposition of the Labor party; and on numerous occasions it will be found that the Liberal and Conservative parties have voted together to defeat the Labor party.

This was notably the case in the amendment to the King's speech and in the proposition made by the party after consultation with the Miners' Federation of Great Britain to amend the miners minimum wage bill. Further, the electroral attitude of the party may best be gauged by the fact that in all the elections it has contested since March. 1911, it has run candidates in opposition to the Liberal and Conservative parties.
